RANDOM SHOTS

A Mexican at Scottsbluff undertook to discipline his wife, and with the aid of a red hot poker accomplished his purpose. The court fined him all of $5 and read him a severe lecture. If he had gouged out her eyes or chewed off her ears, the court would undoubtedly have ordered the culprit's wrist slapped, and read him a chapter from the Bible. We can't be too severe with these cheap foreign laborers.

A sage in Spartanburg, S. C., says there may be some objection to bobbed hair, but it doesn't catch on a man's coat button.

The Passing Show.

"Oh, gee, how my feet hurt. I haven't done a thing the last two hours but walk around, and I'm dying for a chance to sit down."

"The crowds on the streets today make Alliance seem just like Kansas City."

"I came to town today to find whether the report is true that Alliance is going to give away something. I've never got anything here before that I didn't pay for."

"Darn those kids—I can't see a thing."

"They may come up to my home and drag me out of bed, and tar and feather or kill me—but I'll promise you one thing—if they get me I'll get at least four of them."

"It was a great movie, of course, but I can't understand why when all those children came home, not one of them thought of bringing the grandchildren. That old mother must have been simply wild to see the grandchildren."

Add to list of necessary evils the fellows who repair automobile tires and forget that when a nail goes through one side of an inner tube it's likely to go through the other as well.

Mary Whitebelly is credited with the capture of one greased pig, although all the squaws surrounded the porker and the crowd, by pressing closely, really did most of the work. Mary had at least two pounds more lard in her hair and on her beardwork than the rest of them, and if she ever washes up, she'll have earned the victory.

Among the things that give joy to the weary may be listed an accidental glimpse at a handsome young woman who is compelled to "re-roll her own." When once stockings start to slip, there is imperative need for quick action, just as is the case when one's Boston garters prove false to their trust.

Some people have all the luck. And others get by because they are wearing rubber heels.

We've worn rubber heels for over two years, but nothing like that ever happened when we were around.

What Is Profanity?

A couple of ten-year-old hopefuls were walking down West Third street Monday night—a youth and a maid. The boy remarked, in that tone that is prevalent among kids of that age: "Aw, I haven't done that for a hell of a long time."

The girl companion spoke up in a surprised, although not particularly shocked tone: "I thought you weren't supposed to swear after you have been baptised."

"You don't know your stuff," came the reply, "why, 'hell' ain't bad."

At that, you know, there are worse words.

It's getting so the flappers don't know which movie star it is safe to fall in love with. Joe Moore, a brother of Owen, Tom and Matt Moore, all of them movie stars, was arrested in Los Angeles recently on charges preferred by his mother. Joe admitted that he had been drunk for a week, but his mother charged that it was nearer eight years since he had drawn a sober breath.

Maybe he's a conscientious cuss, and couldn't stand to play his part in some of those punk movies unless he were in such a maudlin condition that he didn't know what he was doing. Nothing else will explain some of these movies.

If you've no other way to spend the evening, try this stunt: In nine out of ten cases, a string that is exactly the size of the neck will also be exactly the size of the calf of the leg at its largest point.

Ten or even five years ago, that information would have been valuable to a man with curiosity. Now, alas, only the blind need be curious.

Old story: In the good old days when Joe Miller was still at it, this used to be a big hit in the vaudeville houses: "Why do women have ankles?" Answer: To keep the calves out of the corn.

Philo says: "When a storekeeper finds a lead nickel in the day's receipts, he imagines the country is infested by a desperate band of counterfeiters."

Nature Study

"Did you ever notice," remarked the country boy to his city cousin, "that when a bunch of cattle are grazing they all move along with their heads in the same direction?"

"Why, so they do, don't they?" replied the city boy, glancing at the herd. Then, after gazing long and earnestly, he ejaculated:

"But, by George! I see something you've never noticed. Their tails are all in the opposite direction!"

If they don't hurry up with the Ar-buckle trial, some of us will begin to believe the prosecutor who feared that moneyed friends of the accused would attempt bribery knew what he was talking about.

A voice from heaven assures us that Ole Buck is the kind of a man who wears Congress shoes in the daytime and carpet slippers in the evening, if he wears slippers at all. Ole's threatened to expose our golf score if we mention his neckties again. Why should he use the plural when he has but one? And his wife selected that one. It's a good looking tie, even if it is getting soiled.

Today's Best Story
(And it's none too good.)

An ardent angler took a friend fishing. The friend knew nothing about the gentle art, but was set up with all the necessary tackle, and a nice, comfortable seat on the bank.

The experienced hand started fishing a few yards higher up the stream. Presently the novice said: "How much do those red things cost?"

"I suppose you mean the float?" said the angler. "That only costs about twopence."

"Well, I owe you twopence," said the novice. "The one you lent me has sunk."

Nebraska News Notes

Hog Cholera Spreading.

NORFOLK—Hog cholera has broken out in many parts of northern and western Nebraska, according to word received by County Agent Stewart from state veterinarians who have just returned from the infested districts. The early reports from these officials indicate that many animals are dead or are suffering from the disease. It is feared that the disease is spreading from many herds. In Madison county according to Mr. Stewart, cholera has begun to show serious indications. Seven hogs on the I. J. King farm near Newman Grove have died from the disease. These hogs were in a herd of 106. One boar purchased from the King herd is believed to have infected the herd on the Kaufman farm.

Grand Island Soldiers' Home.

LINCOLN—Governor McKelvie is favorable to the plan of having the United States government take over the state soldiers' home at Grand Island and convert it into a national hospital for sick and disabled ex-service men. He has written a letter to Congressman W. E. Andrews at Washington, expressing his approval of the project and tendering his assistance and co-operation toward its realization.

The governor received a call several days ago from a delegation of Grand Island citizens who presented the matter to him. He assured them that he would be glad to recommend the proposition to the next legislature if it assumes some tangible form in the meantime.

Mr. McKelvie is not prepared to say on just what terms he would be willing to have the soldiers' home turned over to the federal government. The state owns half a million dollars' worth of property there, and some remuneration might be expected for it. However, the cost of maintenance is $125,000 a year, and if this were assumed by the United States it would be considered at least partial compensation.

As the number of civil war survivors is rapidly diminishing, the need of two state soldiers' homes will disappear within a few years at most, the governor thinks. The Milford home will probably be large enough to accommodate all the civil war veterans left at both institutions in the near future.

With this fact in mind, Congressman Andrews is working on the plan to convert the Grand Island institution into a federal hospital for men who served in the world war. Should that be done, it will be considerably enlarged and equipped with all modern hospital facilities.

There is no such institution now maintained by the United States between the Mississippi river and the Rocky Mountains, north of the Mason and Dixon line. Grand Island would be a central point for Nebraska and half a dozen surrounding states.

Automobile wheels are now being made of solid wood, just as were the wheels of mankind's first cart.

Barbers who are accused of profiteering should come into court with specimens of their cheaper cuts.
