Rome Miller Has Ideas to Boost Nebraska Spuds

Rome Miller, well known Omaha hotel man, who a few weeks ago convinced some Omaha commission men that western Nebraska potatoes had as good keeping qualities as those from any other region in the country, has written the following letter to Secretary Thomas of the Alliance chamber of commerce relative to his ideas about overcoming the prejudice against western Nebraska spuds:

"Your communication in reference to western potatoes is most pleasing to me. I am seeking no glory or business advancement in any particular. I came to Nebraska forty-odd years ago with no means and what I have accumulated has been in this glorious state and I feel grateful for the advantages that this commonwealth has given me. I have fought and shall fight for her interests so long as I am alive but what there has been rank discrimination in reference to sandhill and western potatoes of this state. I operated eating houses on the North-western road for some twenty-five years storing many carloads each winter when there was no advantage either of storing, sorting or education to the raiser of best methods for propagation and my potatoes kept with the little human intelligence given them. I have been advocating the use of Nebraska potatoes in Omaha for a number of years without great results.

"I notice that you are associated with the Alliance chamber of commerce. The associated chambers of commerce of the various western communities should bring this grievance to the chamber of commerce of Omaha and thereby bring pressure to bear on the commission men of Omaha to handle their potatoes in a greater quantity or they should start a market of their own. In any case I would be most willing to lend such assistance as I can to the enterprise and to the end that we might teach the citizens of Omaha to practice what they preach—co-operation. We can only build up a great state by taking care of the little things, to say nothing about the big ones, and in the closest teamwork as between the metropolis and the state at large. This applies not only commercially, but politically."

Colored Woman Arrested Friday Told to Leave Town

Jessie Porter, colored, was arrested Friday evening by Chief Jeffers, and was sent out of town Saturday. The charge against her was that of street walking. Jessie, who is from Sterling, arrived in town Thursday with a colored gentleman, Bill Rockhouse, who was well known to local officers, as he has been in town before. Jessie is reported to have had an argument with a man at North Platte, the result being that Jessie removed one of the gentleman's eyes. As no charge was lodged against her on this account, the local officers made no attempt to hold her here.

BIRTHS

June 20—To Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Bennett, Tenth and Mississippi, a boy.

Mrs. B. W. Keach left Sunday for Midland, S. D., where she will visit with relatives.

European nations are working themselves up to the conclusion that the trouble with the world is that America has too much money.—Detroit Journal.

AT THE IMPERIAL

Tonight's attraction at the Imperial is Marie Prevost in "A Dangerous Little Demon." This pleasing star makes a remarkable hit in this film, which is not at all heavy, but is admirably suited to hot weather. A Christie comedy, "Oh Buddie," completes an enjoyable bill.

Wednesday's feature is May Allison in "The Last Card." The plot deals with two families who are neighbors. An act of infidelity in one home unfolds the second in a curious chain of circumstantial evidence, and a young wife is compelled to use her intuition to clear her husband of guilt. Miss Allison has the role of Elsie Kirkwood, the happiest married woman in town, until her husband is put in jail for the murder of a man whose body is found in the basement of their home. Sudden inspiration makes her realize that in some inexplicable, strange way the woman next door has really a hand in the murder. Acting on this clairvoyant realization, Elsie sets a clever trap in which the murderer is enacted to the very last touch, and the real murderer brought to a sudden confession.

"Gleam O'Dawn," with John Gilbert, is scheduled for Thursday. The story is one that requires the best sort of acting to "put it over," and Gilbert, very naturalism gives it its big appeal. Living alone in the Canadian north woods, he runs across his unrecognized father, a man who had deserted his mother before he was born. He meets also a man named Pierre, who tells him he was in love with his mother and has come up into the woods to kill the man who stole her love and then deserted her. By the time Gleam O'Dawn, as Gilbert is known, has learned the identity of his father, he has fallen in love with an adopted daughter of the latter. Gleam O'Dawn swears he will kill his father; but he revises his determination because of the girl.
