derived from the plea of license money, etc. but I shall not waste words on such shallow argument.
Husbands do you want your wives and daughters insulted when passing along the street by some drunken sloth? If not stand up like men and say you will prosecute the first man who opens a saloon here.

Look at York county this state: It is noted far and near as not having a saloon in the county, and for the high moral standing of its citizens. Is its property depreciating in value? Look at York county seat, a town which has increased almost one thousand in population in the last eighteen months, and then answer me. Look again at Seward a neighboring town, which is but little larger now than it was five years ago. And from these two comparisons you may draw a conclusion, although I could cite you to dozens of others. But hold, this is not a lecture but before I close I want to say, and I want it distinctly understood too, that the party who opens a saloon here, must go according to the Slocum Law, or he will get into the worst kind of troubles.

Mr. Wolf of Pennsylvania, the leader of the now defunct third party movement that succeeded in electing the democratic nominee for governor a few years since, has become disgusted with politics in the Keystone state and avows his intention to remove permanently to Dakota. He will probably start a third state movement when he gets out there, which would not be so far out of the way, for Dakota is big enough for three good sized states.
