WIND JAMMING DAYS.

AN OLD MARINER'S TALES OF BRAV-ERY IN WRECK.

"On My Honor as a Sailor, I Won't Leave You," Said the Captain to a Swede Sailor. Bravery and Pathos In the Sea Business of the Old Days.

"Bah!" he said. "You have a lot to learn, young man. You have as much sentiment in your construction as this stick I carry.

"The idea of a youth like you trying to tell me that there is as much bravery and pathes attached to seafaring now as there was when I was master of a wind jammer! You probably believe that you are correct in your statement; but, man alive, you are making a fool of yourself. Here in these days you have lifeboats big and stout enough to carry an army of men. You have steam to manipulate the falls, patent davits to swing clear. No lowering away by hands and no getting them back over the side with every pound of flesh a-pulling. New fangled guns for throwing a life line, rafts that they in the old times?

"Let me tell you something. I don't say but that there are many brave and gallant mariners in the business now. But the old shipwreck meant more in the matter of life taking than the shipwreck of today does. Did you ever hear tell of a sailor of the old school trying to get into a boat before the passengers were out of danger? You needn't say you have, because you have not. Why, the only ones who ever attempt anything of that kind are stokers and firemen and rowdies who have the impudence to call themselves sailors.

"I remember the case of a shore loafer named Holmes, who tried a shenanigan like that. He was afterward tried in the United States circuit court at Philadelphia and was convicted of manslaughter. He was one of 30 shipwrecked persons who took to the long boat, which was greatly overloaded and constantly in danger of sinking. "Nor is that all, young man. There was a shipwreck about 1845, but the name of the craft has escaped my memory. The crew took to one boat, which was overcrowded. A noble Newfoundland, the pet of the ship, swam alongside the boat. All the men turned their eyes sadly upon him, but they knew there was no room for him in that boat. The captain leved that dog better than he loved his life, and he stood up in the boat as he took off his coat and said:

This discovery was made through a casualty recorded in the Maritime Exchange as follows: True Love, barge, was in collision with schooner Gravesend of London, off Gravesend, and had port quarter damaged to such an extent that it was found necessary to tow her into Rochester, and she arrived at that place in charge of the tug Commerce. The true Love has not only outlived her builders and their successors, but has also outlived every craft that was built in her time and for many years afterward, and this fact, coupled with the report that the historic craft is still engaged in active pursuits, places Philadelphia at the very top notch as a shipbuilding center.

In 1764, when this famous old craft was launched on the banks of the Delaware, although her length was but 96 feet 8 inches, she was then the largest vessel of commerce that the Delaware won't go to pieces in the first chop of a had ever floated. Lots of Fun In Juggling Things In the Water With Its Whiskers.

Seals have on either side of the nose a little scattering bunch of whiskers or at the aquarium at Battery park-are not so long as those of the fur seal, but juggles things in the water with them

There may be floating in the pool a fragment of fish skin, for instance, left not leave him. Have you ever heard of from the last feeding. The seal will swim under this and raise it on the tips of its slender bending whiskers. The fragment floats away or dodges off with the agitation of the water caused by the seal's motions, and the seal swings its head under it and raises it again on its whisker tips. If it slides down a wave that the seal has raised, the seal swims after it. The seal is a very rapid and graceful swimmer. Sometimes this seal when it has tossed up the fragment of way. Sloping Shoulders.

And now, says a New York fashion writer, comes the disagreeable news that in foreign fashion centers sloping shoulders are to reign. We have it on undoubted authority that the leopard cannot change his spots nor man add one cubit to his stature, yet will the modern exponent of fashion exercise her ingenuity in the alteration of the anatomy above the shoulders. For many years we have worn our shoulders up to our ears, so to speak. Now all is to be changed, and the fashionable woman must assume the virtue of sloping shoulders, though she have it or not. Seams from neck to shoulder point are to be lengthened, and all fullness that remains in the top of the sleeve will tend in a downward direction. The shoulders proper will remain where they are, but will look as if they had received a direct impetus toward the elbow.

One day in Leadville, Colo., I had just finished dinner, when a stranger spoke to me in the hotel. We chatted for a minute or two, and then the stranger, whose name I afterward learned was Harry Conner, or Black Harry for short, asked me if I was not selling hardware. I told him I was, and he said he wanted to buy a knife. I said I had some knives with me, but only as samone or two good ones, and that you dashing through the fire ahead of us. I would sell one. but did not speak. I noticed that he was watching the door. He did not turn his head, but his eves seemed to be everywhere at once, and, though he was playing steadily, and with fairly good luck, too, I was certain that he saw every motion that anybody made anywhere in the room, excepting of course right behind him.

Presently I noticed that he was watching a man who was just coming in. The newcomer was a stout built, ugly looking fellow, who looked carefully around as he entered and who almost immediately saw Black Harry. He started a little, and then, evidently thinking that Conner did not see him, stepped carefully to his right till he was almost behind where Connor sat. Still Connor did not turn his head, but I could see him watching the other as he stepped slowly around until he was fairly out of the range even of Connor's remarkable eyes. Then I saw Connor suddenly look full at the dealer with a question as plainly expressed as it could have been in words. So I naturally looked at

The newcomer was drawing a revolver, and at the same time Connor was turning his head and throwing the knife I had sold him. He walks NORTH PLATTE, - - NEBRASKA along Princes street in a kilt of royal Stewart or Lennox tartan and usually has a red coat with a dark vest, over the front of which he wears an embroidered belt of scarlet silk instead of plain leather. He is gergeous with dirks, skene dhus, sporrans and other ornaments, and he lets his hair fall to his shoulders under a bonnet that is a cross between Glengary and Balmoral and trimmed with feathers." The burgher who strides along Princes street, bearing these accouterments, is not a crank. He is a level headed, well composed, thoughtful and wealthy gentleman, standing high in Edinburgh society. Suppose that a man thus appareled and caparisoned were to walk along our streets! What a time there would be! Within the past few years, or since the introduction of bicycling, golfing and other funny sports, some of the men and women in American cities wear tail.
