Several individuals who apparently never have a good word to say for anybody or anything, have started the report that the object of the Board of Education in placing the successful bidder for the new school building under a fifty thousand dollar bond was to frighten off home bidders. Such a claim is absolutely absurd. The state law provides that the bond given by a contractor for public buildings shall be double the amount of the contract price, hence the Board could not do otherwise than place the bond at the sum named. If the successful bidder is a North Platte man we opine that he can easily secure the necessary bond.

Alexander Majors, who died in Chicago Sunday was, in the early frontier days, one of the "freighting kings" of the west, the firm of which he was a member owning 3,500 yoke of oxen and over 1,000 horses and mules. It was Mr. Majors that gave Colonel Cody his first job as a young boy, taught him to read and write and later Cody became one of his most trusted pony express riders between Denver and Salt Lake. Upon the completion of the Union Pacific railroad the freighting business was brought to a close and the two men parted company. After many years of separation the two men chanced to meet in Denver in 1892. Majors was in destitute circumstances, while Cody had money to "burn." The latter gave his old employer all assistance necessary, and from that time until Majors' death the two had been in constant communication. Less than three months ago Mr. Majors was a guest at the Cody home in this city, and along with others this writer heard him relate some of his experiences of the early days, and they were "early," for he crossed the Missouri river in 1823 and spent seventy-seven years between that stream and the Pacific coast. Though eighty-six years of age, Mr. Majors retained his mental faculties to a remarkable degree, and as a narrator he was exceedingly interesting.

Beware of Quinonins for Catarrh that contain Mercury. As mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces.
