THIS YOUNG MAN

Is approaching twenty but he looks to us for his garments. We fitted him out for school ten years ago, later on when he wished to present a smart appearance on entering the academy he looked to us. Now he is prepared to step into business life, and having reached an age when he can do his own choosing, we would certainly loose him if our lines failed in any particular to meet his critical taste.

We appreciate the Young Man's trade, and we fully appreciate the degree of painstaking attention to style and detail that it requires to hold it. We, perhaps, have some advantage in the fact that we clothed him as a boy and established the quality and workmanship of our garments firmly in his mind. Now he requires mannish garments of well-tailored stylish effect and he finds his ideals fully met in our splendid line of garments four young men.
