The last week in September David Hunter of Sutherland, Lincoln County, Neb., shipped Nebraska Farmer a basket of peaches, grown in the Platte Valley under irrigation, which were equal in size and color of any peaches seen in this city this great peach year. The peaches were of the Elberta variety, very large and firm, and higher flavored than any Colorado California fruit which reaches this market. The success reached in the production of this sample of peaches promises much for future fruit growing under irrigation in Western Nebraska. — Nebraska Farmer.

Three weeks ago Tom O'Neal ordered a beef tongue sent to his home from a local meat market. It was important that it be sent at once, as he was going out hunting the following day and wanted it for lunch. The tongue, however, failed to show up and Tom and his friends were minus that part of the lunch. Upon returning from the hunt, Mr. O'Neal found a buggy tongue in his back yard. He never knew who it belonged to until last Sunday when the meat market man called for it. The bright delivery boy had been told to take a tongue to Mr. O'Neal's house, and had taken the buggy tongue.
