

An American's Adventure in England.

(Copyright, 1936, by American Press Association.)

I hear a number of Americans say they would like to live in England. I've lived in England, and I don't want to live there any more. In the first place, they have as many annoyances as we have, if not more. In the second, their methods of travel are antiquated, especially railroad travel.

While I was living in London I just thought I would like to see something that looked like virgin country. I'd lived in America, where I could hunt real game and catch fish. I don't mean murdering tame deer in a grove, I mean shooting a wild moose in a forest. I got stuck on the idea one day of going fishing in some of the streams near London.

I sat down by the side of that stream three mortal hours without seeing my cork bob once. Then I leaned my back up against a tree, still holding on to my rod, and went to sleep. I was awakened by a distant railway whistle, and it suddenly occurred to me to take the coming train to London.

The train went on, and I was wondering what had bothered them when I felt something tickle my wrist. I felt and caught a black ant. Then I saw that I was alive with them. They covered me from head to foot, crawled down my neck, up my sleeves and my trousers legs.

Well, there I was in one of those abominable English railway carriages, locked in and a myriad of ants getting between my clothes and my skin every second. If I'd been on a sensible American railway I'd have gone into the baggage car, stripped and shaken them off. However, there being no one but myself in the compartment, I started to get off my outer clothing.

When we reached the London station fully half the passengers who go off crowded around my compartment. Most of the men and some of the women waited while the authorities telephoned to an asylum for keepers to come and take me away. Of course I couldn't leave the car and go out before all these people with no trousers on my legs. I was ready to go to an insane asylum or anywhere else, provided they would cover me up. So I got as far back in the carriage as I could and waited.

Judge Not.

(Copyright, 1936, by American Press Association.)

Soon after becoming a widower I resolved to sell off everything I possessed of a household nature and go abroad for a while. Having no ties, children or other relatives, there was nothing to hold me to any particular place. One day I was clearing out my late wife's desk when I came upon a fat envelope. Opening it, I found something that astonished me.

But to tell my story properly I must begin back about five years. Marjorie and I made a love match. We were both members of a smart set in society and, such being the case, were not especially ignorant of the ways of the world. We both had a number of old flames, and after marriage neither of us was inclined to confine ourselves to the exclusive attention of each other.

However, I dropped all the women I had previously loved, retaining only one, with whom I had a platonic friendship. She was Mildred Burke, a woman of excellent sense and fairly intellectual. Marjorie did not seem to object to the attention of this friend, though she did not herself make a boon companion of Miss Burke.

I was not so satisfied with the continued devotion of one of my wife's admirers, Courtney Stewart. Marjorie seemed to like him for the very reasons that I condemned him. He was reckless, careless, always getting into trouble and always finding some good friend to help him out—in short, the very kind of man to whom a woman is most liable to give her heart. My wife was always telling me of these traits, referring to them as something especially attractive. I declined to be interested.

I remember on one occasion at the breakfast table when my wife was telling me of one of Stewart's escapades I coldly informed her that the man was weak, foolish, dishonest. I saw a suppressed flash in her eye and a slight color rise to her cheeks. "I don't expect you to take an interest in people who are natural, frank, generous. Your kind looks out for his own interest, is devoid of sympathy, never gives himself away, but takes special pains to listen to all he hears."

"Do you refer to any particular person?" I asked, with some hauteur. "Certainly—to your particularly platonic love, Mildred Burke." We left the breakfast table without another word, and there was a coolness between us for several days, but it gradually wore away, and neither again mentioned his or her particular friend to the other.

One morning it suddenly occurred to me that my wife was as apt to be meeting her special friend as I was to meet mine. The thought was not pleasant. But why shouldn't she have the same privilege as I? The case was different. Miss Burke was a woman of high principle. Stewart was a scoundrel and not to be trusted. The bee of suspicion having got into my bonnet, it buzzed and tickled and stung till I was beside myself with jealousy. Had my wife continued to tell me about the fellow's escapades I should have had confidence in her innocence. As it was I was sure there were clandestine meetings.

PLUCK OF A MAGICIAN

Houdin's Experience Among the Marabouts of Algeria.

AN ARAB TRAP THAT FAILED.

The Great French Conjurer Stood the Test and Then by Another Trick Cowed His Infuriated Antagonists. The Story of Palmer's Curse.

There are some points of resemblance between the story of the great French conjurer, Robert Houdin, and the marabouts and the story of Palmer's curse. The first named tale is, strictly speaking, incredible only when regarded from the oriental point of view.

In the fifties the administrators of the French African empire were seriously hampered by the fanatical marabouts, who by their tricks of juggling persuaded their followers of their own supernatural powers and used this belief to fan the spirit of insurrection. Houdin was sent officially on a French warship to Algeria to confound them. While his task proved easy, the trip was not without its dangers.

In Algiers he had allowed himself to be shot at with pistols loaded by the marabouts. But once in the interior, when he was absolutely without the tools of his profession, he was forced to repeat the experiment. He was frightened, but he did not allow his fears to be perceived. He persuaded his audience to postpone the test until next morning in order that he might pass the night in prayer, as he was without the talisman that he needed if the feat was to be performed immediately.

The night he devoted not to prayer, but to insuring his invulnerability, and the next day before a great horde of Arabs he submitted to the test. The French conjurer insisted that in the sight of every one the pistols should be loaded by his enemies themselves. Then he calmly took his place and gave the signal. The sound of the pistol had not died away when Houdin opened his lips, showing the bullet held firmly between his teeth.

His infuriated adversary roared for the other pistol, but the conjurer was too quick. "You could not harm me," he said, "but now see how much greater my powers are than yours. Behold the wall." He fired, and out on the whitewash at the exact spot of his aim there crept slowly a great splootch of blood. The marabouts, in terror, covered before the prowess of the European magician.

Less fortunate in his fate than Houdin was the English orientalist E. H. Palmer. He fell a victim to fanaticism, but the story of his terrible curse will long be repeated and cause shudders to run round Bedouin empires. Only upon the theory of metempsychosis can be explained his extraordinary powers of assimilating the languages and ideas of the east.

He was brought up in the conventional atmosphere of England, but when he turned his attention to oriental subjects he did not merely learn; he simply absorbed. Not only were Persian, Hindoostanee and Arabic perfectly familiar to him, but he knew every obscenity of the slang of the camel drivers, and during his long voyages in the east his European origin was never suspected. Just as Houdin had been officially employed by the French government, so Palmer was by the English, but in a more intimate capacity.

Before the exploit that proved fatal he had many dangerous adventures. Once he was led away by a treacherous guide and betrayed to an Arab gang who meant to rob and kill him. He guessed their intentions, and when they began to inflict upon him petty annoyances he pretended not to notice them. Finally, however, the abuse became too obvious to be longer ignored. He sprang to his feet and drew out a letter that he had received from an English lady. "This to me! Down on your knees, you dogs, and kiss the handwriting of the sultan!" Down on their knees, cowed and groveling, fell his 300 captors.

In 1882 Palmer was sent on a secret service mission among the Bedouin tribes to persuade them against joining the rebellion of Arabi Pasha. He was betrayed and shot. But just before his death he laid upon his assassin the weight of his terrible curse. Now, in the east a curse is something not to be regarded lightly, and Palmer's was one of particular awfulness. It was his last means of defense, and while it did not save him, it blighted the hearing and destroyed the lives of those upon whom it fell. They shrank away from one another in horror. Some of them confessed their crime and were executed; all of them within a few months came to violent deaths. Palmer's curse is still remembered with terror in the east.—Bookman.

Got More Than the Cigar. He was dining at a restaurant in the neighborhood of Leicester square, and while he was sipping his black coffee and firing 500 glances to the minute at a girl in a duffy pink and white dress a stranger gracefully commanded his overcoat. He had just reached the door when the owner tapped him on the shoulder. "Pardon me, sir," he said meekly, "but would you allow me to get another cigar from my coat pocket in case I do not meet you again?" Keep alive in your breast that little spark of celestial fire called conscience.—Washington.

Words To Freeze The Soul.

"Your son has consumption. His case is hopeless." These appalling words were spoken to Geo. E. Blevins, a leading merchant of Springfield, N. C., by two expert doctors—one a lung specialist. Then was shown the wonderful power of Dr. King's New Discovery. "After three weeks' use," writes Mr. Blevins, "he was as well as ever. I would not take all the money in the world for what it did for my boy." Infallible for coughs and colds, its safest, surest cure of desperate lung diseases on earth. 50c and $1.00 Stone's Drug Co. guarantees satisfaction. Trial bottle free.
