Tonight at the High School Auditorium the musical people will meet Prof. Harry Maxwell of Chicago who will direct the Chautauqua General Chorus during the coming week. This meeting tonight will be more in the nature of a reception to Mr. Maxwell, and a large number is desired. You do not have to be invited by special messenger. The invitation is general to all of any and every faith, creed or party. We want to make this chorus the big thing of the Chautauqua. Petty jealousies and nonsense rivalries will have no place there. The musical people of North Platte and vicinity must show that there is no littleness in the musicians mind and must make this chorus a success. No admission nor ticket required to meet with the chorus Friday night. Every thing is free then. Come after the picture show if you can't come before.

And remember you will be missed if you are a singer and don't come. Bring your wife or sweetheart; sister or sweetheart; sister or mother. The children will have a special chorus arranged for them later.

A traveling man for whom the world ought to have been made, came into the ticket office at the depot yesterday and wanted to buy a ticket either east or west for a short distance. The only trains arriving were No. 1 and 2, on which only interstate passengers can ride and so he couldn't get a ticket. Thereupon he commenced to fill the air with blue exclamations of eternal damnation upon the Union Pacific and furnished some amusement for the lookers-on. When No. 1 started to leave he seized his grip and got on, but to the delight of the audience the conductor stopped the train and put him off.

This is the sequel of an infatuation between Martin and Mrs. Cox, dating back a year, and which grew so sensational that Depot Supt. Hilliker was forced to discharge Mrs. Cox, who was matron at the depot, and Martin, who was a ticket agent.
