Railroad Wages.

When the panic struck in 1907 the demands of railway employes for higher wages were just swelling into an impressive chorus. Then suddenly jobs were at a premium and the demands ceased. The occasion of the claim for higher wages ceased also, for the cost of living fell over ten per cent between October, 1907, and June, 1908.

But now the cost of living is back to the pre-panic altitude. Indeed, it is a little more than ever. Moreover, the railroads are about back to the old level of prosperity. Business has increased, and on the whole freight rates have been pressed upward at the same time. Now every day or two we hear that the railroad employes are preparing to demand for themselves a larger slice of the new prosperity. Their wages, they are able to show, have increased 20 per cent in twelve years, their cost of living 45 per cent.

The process of the coming adjustment will be hugely interesting, for it deals with a situation that is p act :al y new and which appears to be approaching in all industry. The organization o' labor modifies, if it does not destroy, the influence of competition on wages. The organization of railroads modifies, if it does not remove, any limitation competition may in the past have set on their capacity to pay wages. All that keeps the railroads from being a mere tax paying agency, taking from the public whatsoever they care to take for themselves and their employes, is the tendency of the public to organize, through political agency, to protect itself.

So here we have labor, employe and public adjusting a distribution of wealth with little assistance from our erstwhile automatic regulator, competition. Force, tempered by law and a sense of justice, will make the adjustment. We may not like to call this socialism, but it certainly is not the competition of Adam Smith.-State Journal.

The records which Dr. Cook will submit to the University of Copenhagen as proof of his claim that he reached the borth pole April 21, 1908, are completed and Walter Lonsdale, Dr. Cook's secretary, sailed Thursday on the steamer United States for Copenhagen, taking the records with him. He expects to reach Copenhagen Dec. 7. Lonsdale said that they contained between 26,000 and 30,000 words and he expressed the opinion that the the university authorities would be able to announce a decision in the matter by New Year's.

LOVERS' BOWER, By F. A. MITCHEL.

[Copyright, 1909, by American Press Association.j

Out of Lake Maggiore, in northern Italy, rises a sheer rock to a height of several hundred feet. On a park where the eminence slopes is an entate acquired by the Peretti family Address 114 S. 12th St., Lincoln, Neb. during the middle ages, when Italian territory was being divided up between the gentlemen robbers of that period. The stronghold built by Peretti is now a ruin, and of this little remains. Yet one may climb the ascent from it to the summit of the rock, proceeding here and there over short spaces of the old path by which the l'erettis frequently ascended to several doctors gave me up, I tried hurl missiles down on an attacking Electric Bitters, which cured me comfoe; few weather beaten stones which tradition calls "Lovers' bower,"

Of all the daughters of the house of Peretti, Bianca, who lived at a time when the Borglas were eminent at Rome, was the most beautiful and the most celebrated. Report said that her beart was as cold as her face was beavenly. Indeed, there were whisperings that danger lurked under ber snowy bosom as the bee is hidden within the flower. Several young nobles who had met her at foreign courts traveled to her home on Lake Magglore to propose for her hand. There they met misfortune. One was said to have fallen ill of a fever, and, although the barber on the Peretti estate let nearly all the blood out of his body in an effort to save him, the young man died. Another was said to bave left the castle as a storm was rising. His boat was wrecked, and he was drowned. It was runnored that a third suitor had been accidentally killed in fencing with the lady be woord, she having declared that she would marry him if he could vanquish her with the foll. But there were those who averred that this man was sent to his death purposely by the ky hearted Bianca.

Whatever of truth there was in these sinister reports, certain it is that none of these three young men ever returned from the wooing. Then Pletro Calleoni, count of Malpaga, who had just succeeded to his family estates, met Blanca at Rome, fell under her thrall and begged her to marry hlm. She replied that she would give him his answer at her father's castle on Lake Maggiore, where he was invited to be her guest the following month at the full of the moon.

The young count was warned to disregard the invitation and keep away from one whose suitors had been, to say the least, so unlucky. But no one on whom Bianca smilled could ever be induced to heed a warning. Pietro could barely walt for the days to elapse when he should visit the girl he loved-to be made happy, he believedand the moon was no sooner half full than he set out from Rome on his journorthward. Reaching the lower end of the lake, he embarked and soon snw the rock of the Perettis looming up ahead of him. He was received by Count Peretti, Blauca's father, and entertained sumptuously. After dining Pletro drew Blanca away on to a terrace and begged for her reply. "I will give it." she said, "on the summit of the rock." Darting forward, she led the way in the mingled twilight and moonlight to the path, which zigzagged upward. Pietro followed and was soon started on a mad chase. The girl, light as a bird. kept always the lead. The lover now and again looked up to see her on the road abead, which to gain height had been turned in an opposite direction. She gazed down on him, an enchanting witchery in her eyes. Though he hurried to his utmost ability, he could never catch her. One moment he would be looking out on to the blue lake, the silhouette mountains and the full pale orb beyond. The next his glance would meet those eyes that were lifting him as the moon draws the ocean. And all the while within him was a fever that was consuming him. At times when he turned a sharp angle in the path his brain reeled, and he was like to fall hundreds of feet below. But there always above him, was that beautiful face to stendy him, and, grasping the zuard rail, he stumbled on. At last the top was reached, a pinnacle of circular rock. And there, in the depths of Lovers' bower, reflecting the moon, were two bright eyes. The count approached, and Blanca sbrank back. His hand touched bers. A thrill shot to his very heart. There remains a fragment of the slab with the two stone supports on which Bianca Peretti and Pietro Calleoni sat side by side.

NOTICE TO NON-RESIDENT DEFENDANTS.

Practically all of the bodies of those who perished in the Cherry, Ill., mine disaster have been recovered. One hundred and sixty-eight were found Tuesday morning, leaving but about a score unaccounted for. The bodies were found in a tangled mass, completely blocking the stairway leading from the third to the second vein, where the men had dropped in an effort to reach the stairs. Black damp was the cause of death. The effort to escape was blocked by debris falling and covering the top of the stair case.

Those muddy crosswalks on Dewey street this week has been the source of considerable complaint, and the city administration has been rather severely "toasted." But it is not the fault of the mayor and council; cement walks were ordered laid several weeks ago, but the freezing weather came before the contractor could start the work. And after all, the mud is preferable to the dust we had been having, and the moistur, is beneficial to the country.

There was a general cessation of business yesterday, practically all the stores remaining closed throughout the day. Union Thanksgiving services were held at the Baptist church and were well attended. The weather was bright and warm and many people were out on the streets. A matinee at the Crystal and skating at the rink were afternoon amusements.
