A MENTAL DIPLOMAT

By NATHAN HARDY. Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

One morning about the middle of the last century a French fleet had been disabled in a storm off Sokotra and put into Aden, a British port, for repairs.

Naturally when the governor at Aden saw so formidable a fleet he wondered what was its object. He asked the French admiral, and the admiral averred that the ships were making an ordinary cruise, but the British knew very well that vessels in those days did not make ordinary cruises in fleets, and his curiosity was sharpened by the evasive reply.

For a couple of weeks the French and British officers fraternized while the work on the vessels was pursued with a pretense of activity, but with little accomplished. During this period the Britishers made every effort to learn the Frenchmen's secret.

And so long as men alone had the matter in hand the secret might have been kept forever. Wheeling information is a province especially belonging to women. The governor, despairing of inducing the Frenchmen to speak, asked his wife to help him.

"Katie!" she called. "A trim serving maid whose pink and white complexion denoted that she hailed from Ireland came into the room."

"How far ye goin', then?" "Oh, we go west." "To France?" "Non."

"He towld me, m'm." "Where do they go?" asked the governor eagerly. "It's a place called Parim."

Secretly giving orders for a gunboat to immediately sail with a detachment of British soldiers under cover of the night and occupy the island, the governor invited the French officers (who were about to sail) to a farewell banquet and ball for the day but one following.

A BLACK HAND LETTER

By M. QUAD. Copyright, 1910, by Associated Literary Press.

Major Cleveland, retired, was in the wrong of it. He had permitted and tacitly encouraged young Mr. Herbert to visit the house and listen to his war stories and fall in love with his daughter Janet, and then when he asked for her hand he had drawn himself stiffly up and replied.

"It cannot be, sir! I am of the army, sir, and, though retired on half pay by a grateful country, once of the army always of the army. My dearest hope is for Janet to marry a colonel in active service. I shall speak to her at once, sir—at once."

That was all. The major congratulated himself that his order would be obeyed, and Miss Janet put on a look and assumed the attitude of a broken hearted girl not long for this world.

Mr. Herbert did not get the note intended for him; Miss Janet did not get a reply as expected; the mother saw new cause to believe that her daughter was not long for this world, and the major sighed and wished that some one would come in and listen to his war stories.

The village marshal was consulted, and he struck a clew. That clew led to a tin peddler, who fainted away when arrested. Other clews were struck and followed, and before night of the first day five persons had been hauled to the lockup.

Herbert, the grocer's boy, had taken over the ownership of the missive for Herbert, the lover. He had shown it to the shirtmaker, and her jealousy had been aroused. She it was who had written the "Black Hand" letter.

"By heavens, no!" he shouted. "Or that a shirtmaker is jealous of your daughter?" "Don't talk that way!"

The major thought it over, and Mr. Herbert was invited to return, and as one of the family he has got to be quite a war talker himself.
