It does Theodore Roosevelt no justice to remind his fellow countrymen that the tremendous demonstrations which are being made over him in all countries of Europe which he visits are in a very vital sense tributes to America as well as to a great American. In large measure the country gets the applause and commands the attention centered upon the man.

It is perfectly true that no other American could have caused such demonstrations, in so many countries. No other citizen of the United States could have called forth such extraordinary evidence of admiration and honor. In that sense the Roosevelt ovations are personal.

But, on the other hand, if his career had been upon any less vast and momentous stage, if it had dealt with smaller things and weaker forces, not even Theodore Roosevelt could have made any such impression upon Europe. It would have been impossible for him to arouse the interest which has been shown in every country he has visited. The man and the nation had to be united for the effect which has been left last night for a two weeks' visit at produced upon foreign lands. It was necessary for such a dynamic personality to have the possibilities at hand which Roosevelt found in his own country, if his career was to move the imagination of the world as it has. So the American republic may fairly claim a liberal share in the tribute paid Theodore Roosevelt in Europe. He would be the first to acknowledge 'he justice of such a division of the honors of his wonderful journey from one cheering capital to another.

Boesting a Town.

Many people have a sense of humor too keen for the advance of their town. When any proposition looking toward civic or business betterment is suggested, their first thought is a perception of its weakness or absurd aspects. There is a certain selfsatisfaction in being able to pick flaws not seen by duller fellow citizens. The contagion of fault finding spreads, the town rises to a guffaw about it, and one more chance to go ahead is laid to sleep under the daisies.

The power of criticism is an unimportant faculty compared with the power of construction. A corner loafer may make perfectly just criticisms on the governor or the president, but only one man in a hundred thousand or a million can do the work of those jobs. -Norfolk News.

About six months ago I was suffering from pains in my back and kidneys, always more severe when I attempted to stoop or arise from a sitting position. The kidney secretions were also irregular in passage and annoyed me greatly. The doctor's medicine and other remedies I tried gave me no relief and a friend, hearing of my suffering advised me to take Doan's Kidney Pills, as he had been cured of the same complaint by them.
