Plans for harmony within the republican party in New York received a set back Tuesday when the state committee by a vote of twenty to fifteen refused to recommend Theodore Roosevelt for temporary chairman of the state convention. It was a notching of Roosevelt's strength against the "old guard" of the party. The result of this slap at Roosevelt will be watched with interest. Unquestionably he has the rank and file of the party with him.

The state fair management is offering this year premiums amounting to $2,650 for county exhibits in agricultural farm products. The state has been divided into three sections, western, central and eastern, for county collection exhibits and the amount of precounty to make a display of their agricultural products. Additional premiums will also be offered for individual exhibits. The fair will be held Septemfifth to ninth, Mayor Dahlman was in a jubilant humor this morning, "It was a remarkable victory in a sense, yet it only bears out what I have alway contended, that a man must come out and define his position in these acute issues and then stand there. It was a single handed fight on my part, except that I had many enthusiastic friends working for me everywhere. Many of them do not know me personally, yet they felt as I do, that men cannot be legislated into a temperate life nor have wings attached by statute. - Omaha Bee.

It is to be feared that our exportable surplus of breadstuffs will be smaller than ever this year. The prolonged drought has had a ruinous effect upon pasture and we must therefore devote a large part of the corn crop to feeding stock. Hay, which is usually our second largest crop, has failed badly, and our own industrial population is an increasingly large consumer of wheat. The prospects of shifting the balance of trade to the credit side of our ledger are anything but bright. Our July exports made a deporable showing and the urgent need of a curtailment in personal expenditures and consumption is again brought before us. It is all part of the great lesson which we are slow to learn, that we must, everyone of us, settle down to save more, consume less and sternly restrict public and private extravagance.-Wall Street Journal.

By the middle of October the people teenth census. Up to date the names tricts have been counted. It is known that the census officials generally fall in with the popular idea, that there are about 90,000,000 people in the United larger increase would now be necessary to bring the figure up to the 90,000,000 mark. This result is arrived at by a purely arithmetical calculation, and not by any compilation of the figures recently taken. About 300 nimble-fingered young men and women are engaged figures which, when the final computation is made, will show the total population.

It is announced that a farmer in Kansas has invented a machine for threshing grain in the fields, which has been given two trials and worked satisfactorily, one man doing the work of twenty-five and one machine and four horses supplanting several machines and many horses now used in harvesting and threshing. The biggest problem of the grain farmer is that of help at harvest time, and if the Kansas man's invention is all that is claimed it will not only solve that one vexations problem but will be advantageous in a variety of ways. The fact is that production and development in the United States have outrun the supply of human hands, and that nothing short of further labor-saving machinery can be depended upon to keep pace with further production and development. -Kearney Hub.

U. P. Shows Big Earnings.

Prevention of forest fires is likely to receive a great deal of attention at the forthcoming national conservation congress at St. Paul. An Inventive Yankee A Story of the Days of

Pirates By DONALD CHAMBERLIN Copyright, 1919, by American Press

More than a hundred years ago young Captain Herbert Chandler sailed his ship, the Wasp, into a cove on the shores of the island of Jamaica, cast anchor and sent boats ashore with casks for water. While waiting their return two vessels appeared out on the sen, the one a clumsy brigantine, the other a low cut, rakish craft with enormous sails. Chandler brought his glass to bear on the two ships and was not long in determining that one was a merchantman, the other a Spanish picaroon, and the picaroon was chasing the merchantman. The former flew no flag, but the captain knew only too well that she was a pirate and if the wind held would overtake the merchantman,

This was at a time when piracy had been almost entirely swept from the West Indies, and few merchant ships had means of opposing the villains. Chandler could see no evidence of guns aboard the brigantine, and he had but one little barker on his own ship. He had no women aboard, but judged from the size and build of the merchantman that she might have passen-

But the wind was very light, and what there was was dying down. The sun was near the western horizon, and it had no sooner set than the last traces of a breeze set with it. The two vessels, now about three miles apart, stood still, their sails flapping as the swells rolled under them. Chandler began to take thought how be might save both his own and the other ship from the pirate. He had some small arms aboard, but no guns except the one mentioned, while, though the portholes in the picaroon were masked, he knew that she must be well armed with cannon. His small arms would be of no use against her. Chandler ran over in his mind what he had aboard that he might use in a fight and remembered that he was carrying among other things for blasting purposes in the Mexican mines a fulminating powder used in those days. But what use could be made of this against the cannon balls of the pirate? Chandler was a Yankee, and the Yankees even at that remote period were famed for their shrewdness and inventive genius. He formed a plan to attack the picaroon with fulminating powder. Noting the positions of the ships with his compass, he waited till midnight; then, putting a crew in each of two boats, he weighed anchor and ordered them to tow the Wasp out to sea, his object being to get between the two vessels. Neither ship displayed a light, but a faint glimmer of cabin lights was perceptible on the pirate. Chandler stopped when he thought be might be in the proper position. He proximity. When the first faint dawn came Chandler saw that the Wasp, the pirate and the merchantman occupied the three angles of a triangle. He was pleased to see that he was nearer the pirate than the merchantman, for if the former attacked the latter before attacking the Wasp Chandler could afford no assistance. His plan did not admit of this. All three ships had their sails hoisted ready to take advantage of the slightest breeze. As soon as there was sufficient light the pirate displayed the skull and crossbones from her peak and sent a shot before the bow of the Wasp. Chandler, understanding this as a demand for surrender, returned from his popgun a shot no bigger than a boy's rubber ball. He did this that the pirate might attack him with his ship instead of sending boats to take possession without a

With the rising of the sun a ripple was seen coming on the water, and a breeze came with it. It caught the plearoon first, and she approached the Wasp, running out her guns as she did so, but nearing her prey it was plain that there was no armament aboard, and she ran them in again.

The critical moment had come Chandler stood on the quarterdeck awaiting his enemy, occasionally casting a glance at a man partially concealed aloft on that end of the gaff swung from the mainmast. When the bowsprit of the picaroon came within a cable's length of the Wasp, Chandler gave an order to lower the sails. The pirate inpped the Wasp and was making ready to grapple and board when a signal was given that turned the tables. Chandler rais ed his hand. Men concealed under the bulwarks pulled on a line fastened to the side next the picaroon. The man above, carrying a demijohn, nimbiy crawled out on it. gaining a position nearly over the pirate, now not twenty feet from the Wasp. Giving the demijohn a swing, he tossed it on the pirate's deck.
