Shallenberger Will Contest.

Monday's Omaha Bee said: On the face of the returns, "Jim" Dahlman has assumed the democratic nomination for governor by not more than 200, over Governor Shallenberger, but if so, the governor is determined not to yield until every legal recourse to get a square deal has been exhausted.

That was the decision reached as a result of the conference Governor Shallenberger held here in Omaha, Saturday with his local supporters and lieutenants. From a source of information that ought to know, it is learned that the contest that will always give me relief.

Commissioners' Proceedings.

August 17, 1910. Board met pursuant to recess taken. The board proceeded to get out the assessed values of the school districts for the purpose of making annual levy.

August 18, 1910. Board of county commissioners met pursuant to adjournment, present Springer, Walter, Streitz and county clerk.

Theodore Lowe is awarded the contract transcribing the indexes outside North Platte at 1 1/2 cents per line.

Road No. 327 comes before the board for final action, the board being of the opinion that the road is not necessary and the damages would be so great that the board therefore denies the petition.

The county clerk is hereby directed to refund to the depositor any funds left after deducting the cost that has accrued in the matter of road petition No. 327.

Claim of P. H. Burwood, road work district No. 57, 100.00.

Bond of L. H. Larson, road overseer of Dist. No. 20 approved.

Claim of Joseph Spiess road work district No. 1 allowed 75.00.

Whereupon the board of equalization continued getting out values. The values of the personal property being completed, the board of equalization takes a recess until tomorrow until 9 a. m.

Cottonwood Items.

Chas. Discoe has been hauling corn for several days from Jacob Rosenburg's.

Misses Anna and Marguerite Sowle arrived Sunday from the eastern part of the state and will spend their summer vacation with their father, B. J. Sowle.

Gus. Discoe and wife have moved into the house on the Griffith place where James Rose has been batching.

Miss Esther Reynolds arrived home Tuesday evening from Lexington, where she had been for ten days visiting relatives and attending Chautauqua.

Mrs. Pete Jorgensen and children are visiting friends at Minden.

Andrew Sowle and Miss Nelson made a sneak to North Platte last Tuesday to attend the Carnival, but rice, old shoes and tin pans have been in demand ever since.

Sam Fackler has sold his farm and crops in Box Elder Canyon to Ed Bockus and with his family expects to locate near Spokane, Wash., as soon as possible.

Frank Bockus and family have got enough of Oregon and returned to cast their lot once more with the Nebraskans.

The Blue Star boys are getting up a camping party for this week. They will pitch their tent near Curtis and we fear there will be a famine in that land immediately afterward.

Wm. Wafer has purchased the former Clark farm in Snell Canyon and will again be our neighbor.

Mr. and Mrs. E. M. Arnold have decided to remain in Indiana during the winter, but Miss Vesper, accompanied by a bull pup, arrived home Friday morning. We don't know what Vesper needs of such a companion unless it is to eat up the surplus beaux. So beware of the bull dog.

ANSWERS EVERY CALL

North Platte People Have Found That This is True.

A cold, a strain, a sudden wrench. A little cause may hurt the kidneys. Spells of backache often follow. Or some irregularity of the urine. A certain remedy for such attacks. A medicine that answers every call, is Doan's Kidney Pills, a true specific.

Many North people rely on it. Here is North Platte proof. John T. Hollenbeck, 520 East 11th St., North Platte, Neb., says: "My kidney trouble dates back to the Civil War. When I returned home the privations had undermined my system and deranged my kidneys. I used a great many kidney remedies, but nothing compared with Doan's Kidney Pills, which I procured from McDonell & Graves' Drug Store. I have appealed to them on numerous occasions and the results have always been excellent. Of course, I am pretty old now, past seventy-seven, and must expect some trouble, but I feel that in Doan's Kidney Pills, I have something that will always give me relief."

Kidnaped

By LOI SE B. CUMMINGS Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association

Job Wilkins was altogether too tender hearted for a sheriff. He lived in a town not far from the Canadian border with his wife and children and only accepted the position because no one else would take it. Besides having nothing but the house he lived in, he needed the pitiful salary attached to the office.

One night a citizen of the place was waylaid, snatched and robbed. A man named Fletcher was suspected and arrested. Fletcher's wife went to Mrs. Wilkins with a pitiful story of her husband's innocence and persuaded her to beg the sheriff to let Fletcher off. When Wilkins came home he found Mrs. Fletcher at his house. She told so straight a story and begged so hard that Wilkins, since he had no power to let his prisoner go free, agreed to furnish bail for his appearance in court.

Wilkins signed a bail bond for $4,000, and Fletcher was released from jail. Fletcher disappeared. It was evident that it was his purpose to jump his bail, and to pay the bond would take all Wilkins had—his home. He heard of Fletcher's flight a few days after it occurred, and, setting a watch on Mrs. Fletcher, she and her husband were traced to a Canadian village a dozen miles beyond the border. Something must be done to save what little Wilkins possessed. Besides, the sheriff was very wroth at having been tricked. He thought over the different ways by which the criminal might be brought back and determined that he would try to kidnap him. This he preferred to using the process of extradition, which he considered hopeless.

Wilkins interested a friend of his named Parker, who agreed to help him. Unfortunately for their plan the village where Fletcher lived was the headquarters of a troop of mounted police. To go into a town right under the noses of these men, capture a man protected by British law and carry him twelve miles was a risky undertaking.

At nightfall the two men, having hired the fastest team they could find, crossed the St. Lawrence river by ferry. They agreed to pay the ferryman a good sum to be on the Canadian bank at the time of their return and be ready to push off at a moment's notice. They hired another team at a village midway between the river and their point of attack. This team was to be ready and waiting for them in the road on their return.

Wilkins and Parker drove into the town where Fletcher lived soon after bedtime. Fletcher's house had been located, and, pulling up before the door, Wilkins alighted and knocked. Presently Fletcher in nightclothes opened the door. Wilkins cowed him at the point of a pistol, then threw his strong arms around him and literally carried him, kicking and struggling, to the wagon. With ropes ready they bound their prisoner and were driving off when Fletcher's wife appeared at a window, screaming loud enough to wake the whole village. As they dashed through the streets shaves were thrown up and people put out their heads to see 'what was the matter, lights appeared, there were cries of "Stop 'em!" and presently a church bell began to sound an alarm that roused the police force.

By this time they had reached the outskirts of the village and were clattering southward along the turnpike. Wilkins kept looking backward, but could see no followers until they had covered a mile. Then the sound of horses' hoofs on the stones told him that the mounted police had started on their pursuit. Down came the whip on the horses' haunches, and they nearly doled their pace.

For five miles it was a steady chase. Their team was a good one, and the police were mounted on indifferent horses. Nevertheless the latter had gained a little at every milestone. When they drew near the village where they expected to find their relay team their pace was considerably diminished. Looking ahead, there stood the team ready beside the road. Their pursuers were not a quarter of a mile away. Pulling up beside the relay, they hustled their prisoner from one team to the other and were off before their pursuers came up.

The sergeant of police, seeing that the kidnapers had secured fresh horses, sent several of his best mounts to make a dash for them. Wilkins' horses, though fresh, had a load to pull, and this made an even race. Bullets began to whistle past them, but they galloped on, their pursuers maintaining their distance behind them. Then a bullet pierced one of the horses. This looked as though the game was up, but the animal seemed goaded to gallop the faster.

Finally from a rise in the ground the kidnapers could see the dim outlines of the river. It was an incline straight down to the ferryboat, which they could see on the near shore. The horses had been obliged to walk up the rise, which had brought their pursuers dangerously near them. Now Wilkins dashed them down the incline in spite of the danger of their stumbling and falling, the sound horse now dragging the wounded one. Pulling up beside the ferryboat, they hurried their man into it, the ferryman pushed off, and the police appeared on the top of the rise an eighth of a mile away.

When the court met to try Fletcher he was on hand.
