It will require the official count to de termine whether Dean or Taylor received the democratic nomination for congressman in this district. The unofficial returns show the two candidates to be close together in the number of votes received, with Dean a little in

Congressman Kinkaid received a ma jority over Beeman in every county is the district, and his vote compared with that received by Beeman was about three to one. This is evidence that the people of the district have lost none of their confidence in Judge Kinkaid, and he is certain to be re-elected by a big majority.

Shallenberger demanded a recount of the democratic votes cast for governor in several counties; Dahlman goes him one better and asks for a recount of the whole state. This shows that Dahlman is a true sport, he not only comes into the game but he raises Shallenberger's ante so high that the Governor begins to think the Mayor holds pat hand.

This early in the campaign it is an nounced that railroads will join forces with the brewers in the effort to elec Dahlman. Two years ago the railroads succeeding in defeating Sheldon for governor, perhaps they will be able to defeat Aldrich this year. The fight made by Aldrich in the legislature for a reduction in freight rates naturally calls for hostility on the part of the railroads.

Aldrich Discusses Situation. In discussing the general political situation in the state Mr. Aldrich, the republican nominee for governor, says: 'The republican party has taken definite stand on specific questions and the contest will not be materially affected by the personality of the democratic candidate for governor, whoever he may be. We can point to dollars the provisions were kept and given a and cents that republican legislation has put into the pockets of the people. Enactments placed on the statute books by the republican party in Nebraska have established right relations between the people and the common carriers, and but for the fact that the great railroads of the state are today trying of every one, he began to mount the to nullify these good laws, such as the parapet. two-cent fare and the freight rate bill. "What are you doing?" cried the there would be no occasion to discuscorporation issues this year. Since the railroads have kept up the fight upon the legislation referred to, these matters continue to be live issues, and they will remain until the railroad companies cease efforts to make and unmake state officers.

"Another powerful special interest in Nebraska has had the brazen effrontery to put forth a candidate as its particular respresentative for the biggest office which the people of the state have to fill The brewers, as well as the railroads, need to be taught a lesson which they will remember. Before this campaign closes every voter will know what is going on and what these two forces are seeking to accomplish. It is greatly to be regretted that such a situation exists, but they are alone responsible for it. I would have much preferred to conduct a campaign along economic lines free from any tinge of passion or prejudice, but if I am compelled to meet the issues made by the special interest I shall not hesitate to do so, and things will be called by their right names."

Mr. Aldrich stated his belief that the republicans of the state will be found working harmoniously together in the campaign, and that thousands of fusion voters in common with a large part of the democratic and populist press, will support the republican ticket.

Railroads in Politics.

There has lately appeared in Wall street copies of circulars which the Illinois Central and the Atchison railway, though their presidents, have issued to their employes advising them to work against and vote against candidates for political office who they believe are hostile to rate advances and the railway corp r t ons general y. The Illinois Central circular is particularly emphatic in its condemnation of such policies. It is natural for railway heads to desire to utilize all legitimate means to strengthen and build up the properties entrusted to their care, but it is to be seriously questioned whether there is not a boomereng hidden somewhere in this program of the above named railways. By their action the railway executives lay themselves open to the charge of initiating a class fight, which policy may find its antithesis in the adoption of means by other interests which desire to maintain or obtain low freight rates. to defeat procorporation candidates for way entry into politics by the above means will injure, rather than help, the railway cause,—New York Financial World. office. A Story of the American Revolution

One morning during the war for independence, while the British occupied New York and portions of New Jersey. the Americans were watching a force occupying a small fort lying between Orange and Elizabeth. The fort was much in the way of the Americans, rendering the communications between their different leaders difficult. A force was sent to capture it, but the stronghold was well stocked with ammunition and provisions, so that it would likely be able to bold out for a long while against an attacking party. The Americans, not knowing of a weak spot where an entrance could be forced, dared not try to storm it.

The commander of the patriots surrounded the fort on the north, south and west sides, leaving communication for the enemy open on the east. One morning the garrison saw an officer in the British uniform galloping over the fields from the point that had not things. There were four little children been closed He rode through a fire from the American guns, but be was within range of only a few of them. and none of their shots took effect. He made his entrance into the fort and was received with acclamations by the garrison, all being interested to know why he had risked his life to join them. No one knew him, but he introduced himself as an aid to General Howe at New York.

"Major." he said to the commanding lops that this post be held. He has directed me to inspect it, its garrison. ammunition, provisions, etc., and report to him exactly what you require to make a successful defense. As soon as I gain the required information I shall return, and anything you need will be dispatched immediately."

"But how did it happen that the rebels let you get in here?" asked the ma-

"That is their affair. Who has blundered at leaving open a passageway I don't know. I expected to be obliged to pass their lines under cover of the night; but, finding an opening, I concluded to run for it. I expect to be obliged to return in an entirely different manner.' The officer was shown the magazine, the ordnance and the storehouse where statement of the amount of supplies on hand. He insisted that it be written on tissue paper and rolled in a little ball incased in wax in order that be might swallow it if in danger of being captured by the enemy. After inspecting the interior he went out to look at the defenses. To the surprise commanding officer. "Do you wish to be picked off by a rebel sharpshooter? These men are all hunters and could kill a squarrel on our ramparts, to say nothing of a man.'

"Major." replied the officer, "I have been sent here to learn about this post in order that you may be supplied with all that is required to defend it. Will you kindly inform me how I am to know what force you need unless I see the approaches?" "But you will be killed."

"That, sir, is what a soldier is forto be killed. He is to obey orders, and the matter of danger is not to concern him. I must see the lay of the land surrounding you. That I cannot do without exposing myself."

With that General Howe's aid ascended to the parapet. He had scarcely shown himself when a bullet sang by his ear. He paid no attention to it. walking slowly around the inclosure. every now and again a bullet being fired at him. One knocked off an epaulet; another pierced his hat. The men down in the inclosure looked at him with wonder.

"The bravest man I ever saw?" exclaimed one.

"Foolhardy!" cried another. "He'll not escape much longer!" exclaimed a third.

The officer stopped at an angle which seemed to have arrested his attention. stooping down as if to get a clearer view of it. From it the ground sloped gently toward the enemy, but between it and them was a clump of trees. Then be arose, took out his handkerchief and blew his nose. The next moment he came down from the para-

"If there is anything about this fort," said the major commanding, "unknown to you I should like to know what it is. But you have taken a fearful chance for your life, and only wonderfully good fortune enables you to return with the information."

"I have still another gantlet to run." was the reply. "to get through the rebel lines with the information. That, however, does not trouble me. My general gave me my orders, and it is my duty to obey them. If I fail there are others to repeat the process till some one shall make known your requirements."

That night General Howe's aid sailied forth, declaring that he would steal through the enemy's lines. In the early morning just before dawn the patriots made a dash for the fort. climbing the parapet at the angle where the inspector had blown his nose. # BROUGHT TO HIS SENSES

By MARTHA A. HUTCHINS Copyright, 1910, by American Press

Many suicides result from broading. One of the best antidotes for such a condition of mind is a good thrashing Take a man who is down on his tuck. He is the same man with the same strength, health and ability as at other times, but his mind needs a shifting Let somebody throw him out of a window with something beneath to break the fall he expects and very likely the shock will bring him to himself.

Evelyn Hawthorne one day received a telegram from her brother-in-law, Henry Fitch, to come at once-her sister was dying. Evelyn took the next train and arrived only in time to bid her sister goodby. The dying words were, "I wish you to marry Henry and bring up my children."

The husband was prostrated. He was a good, strong, manly fellow, but prone to look upon the dark side of left him, with no mother to take care of them. Instead of attempting to drive his bereavement out of his mind, he permitted it to take complete possession of him. He moped and brooded and brooded and moped, and that was all he did day in and day out.

Consequently the lond all fell upon Evelyn. She did all she could to encourage Henry, but in vain. He sank lower and lower into the slough of despond till she discovered one day officer, "the general is extremely anx that he was meditating suicide. Something must be done. She was a courageous girl, but the only scheme she could devise required a man to execute. She telegraphed her brother Ethan to come to her at once. He arrived by the next train, and Evelyn told bim what she feared for Henry.

That same evening Henry went out alone. There was an awful took in his eye-a look to indicate that he was bent on taking his life. Ethan Hawthorne armed himself with a revolver and an ax. Evelyn tied a strip of black cloth over his face with boles cut for his eyes. Then he turned his coat inside out, pulled a slouch bat over his forehead and sallied forth after Henry. He overtook his man making direct for the river. No one could have had any object in going to a river at that time of night except to jump in and end his troubles.

"Hello!" cried Ethan. The figure ahead turned and asked what was wanted.

"I want you," replied Ethan, "What for?" "I'm going to kill you."

"Go nhead."

Ethan raised his revolver, and there was an ominous click. "Who are you," said Henry, "and what are you going to kill me for?"

"No matter who I am. I'm going to kill you because I have been sent by the Lord to make a sacrifice of you." As a preliminary to this pious work Ethan fired a shot, which sang a viclous song in Henry's ear. Henry dodged. "Hold on there," he said. "If you're going to kill me I'd like to go home and say goodby to my family.

Ethan smiled. It was evident that Henry's suicidal intention had been

"There's no time for that. I hear voices continually saying. 'Kill him. kill him, kill him!"

Another shot passing close to Henry's other ear warned him that he was in terrible danger of being murdered by a lunatic. His brain, naturally quick and resourceful, began to call up expedients for outwitting the madman. His mind was as sound and as keen as ever.

"Don't shoot any more." he said. "till I've told you something. I'm the father of four motheriess children. Don't you think the Lord would like to have me live to provide for them instead of sending you to kill me?"

"I never thought of that," said Henry, lowering his pistol and raising his ax to his shoulder, where it would be better seen.

"I have a sister-in-law. She would have all the care of the little ones besides working for them. If she didn't they would starve." "Are you the head of the house?" "Yes. They are all dependent on

"What are you doing out here?"

"I was-well, I'm taking a walk." "There's another voice. It says, 'Kill him!' A bullet whistled this time a short distance over Henry's head. Then Ethan put away his pistol, took his ax in both bands and gave a wild shout. Henry took to his beels. Ethan now had no fear that he would jump into the river, so instead of following him he returned to the house and assumed his own rational habiliments. Presently there was a step without, and Henry came in. He went up to Evelyn. put his arms about her neck and "Forgive me, Evelyn," he said. "I've come to my senses. I have been well nigh capsized by grief. But I'm all right now.' That was the end of Henry Fitch's mental aberration. It was months before he was told of the ruse to bring him to a sound mental condition de vised by Evelyn and executed by her brother. Evelyn continued to care for the children and make the household happy till Henry opened her eyes to the fact that she was necessary to them and to him. They were married. and Evelyn, understanding Henry better than her sister had understood him. munch him assyster.
