THAT'S the way a watch is constructed. A workman may be a skilled mechanic but know little about a watch.

Only an expert should be allowed to work on a watch—that's why you'll find only experts at work at our benches.

All of our watch repairers could pass the examination for a watch inspector for a railroad.

If you want expert watch repairing in every sense of the word, bring your watch to us.

Miss Elsie M. Johnson and sisters arrived home Saturday after a six weeks visit in Illinois. For five weeks they were the guests of their aunt and uncle, Mrs. A. J. Ward and Mr. John Rubrake, of Hoopston, Ill. The past week they enjoyed the hospitality of Rev. and Mrs. John F. Seibert of Chicago Ill. Rev. Seibert likes his new work very well, but nevertheless they were interested in hearing about their old North Platte friends. They certainly left Chicago with the impression that the Seiberts were royal entertainers.

A beautiful line of sparkling Cut Glass. Exclusive agent for the celebrated Libby factory. Clinton, Jeweler and Optician.

Gus Stagman, night fireman at the waterworks plant, was seriously burned on the arms and face last Friday morning shortly before quitting work. The blowout behind the boiler came off and the heavy pressure of steam blew open the doors of the fire box, blowing out a torrent of hot coals and cinders. At the first knowledge of the accident Stagman was directly in front of the fire box and before he could get out of danger was struck full in the face with the hot blast. While his burns are not dangerous they are very painful and his recovery will be slow. Albert Gerkin is filling his place as night fireman.

At the Baptist parsonage Saturday evening Fred Armstrong and Miss Lillian Samelson were united in marriage by Rev. Favoright. The ceremony was very quietly performed in the presence of only the near relatives of the young couple and though friends have long suspected that it would occur it was somewhat of a surprise. The couple left the following morning for a month's trip to Pacific coast points and upon their return will be at home to their friends at the residence recently built by the groom on north Locust street. Both Mr. and Mrs. Armstrong are well known in this city. The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Samelson who have made their home in or near North Platte for a number of years. She has a large circle of friends who unite in extending their best wishes to the young couple. Mr. Armstrong came here from Ogalalla several years ago accepting a position as fire man on the road.

The Genius of Advertising

By THERESA C. HOLI

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association

Miss Adelia Mitvale's father having failed, died and left his family penniless, she decided to be a milliner. She served an apprenticeship; then, getting some money after the settlement of her father's debts, she set up a shop of her own. Having no trade, she was making a failure of it.

One day Tom Ferguson, who had known Miss Mitvale in her halcyon days, passed her shop and, seeing her sign, went inside. He found her in tears. She told him the cause.

Now, Ferguson was in the advertising business and knew the difference between goods brought before the public and goods never heard of.

"Why don't you advertise?" he asked. "I haven't enough money to make a success of advertising. I have been told that one must not only have plenty of means with which to advertise, but must know how to advertise."

"How much money can you raise?" "I might furnish $200, but if I spend it for advertising I shall have nothing left for other necessities."

"You are right in saying that one should know how to advertise, but you must make your goods known or go out of business. You can't pay rent and other expenses without selling hats, and you can't sell hats without people knowing that you've got hats to sell. I'll think over a scheme that will cost little money and produce considerable results. Cheer up. I'll see you again soon."

A few days later Adelia received a note from Mr. Ferguson suggesting that she prepare a couple of the most beautiful hats she could make and let the style be something new. She went to work at once. The fashion for hats had been rather small. Miss Mitvale's artistic instincts told her that a large hat is the most impressive. She made a couple of hats a trifle larger in the brim than any that had ever been produced, adding trimmings and feathers in proportion. When they were finished, though they were very different, each was a dream of beauty. She wrote Mr. Ferguson a note announcing that they were ready. He immediately sent her an address to which he asked her to send them.

The hats were delivered, and Miss Mitvale waited for Mr. Ferguson to announce his advertising scheme. The next morning on taking up the paper her eye was attracted by a heading in large capitals as follows:

TURNUED OUT OF A THEATER.

Ladies When Requested to Remove Their Hats Refuse to Do So.

Last evening at the theater two ladies were sitting in a proscenium box when a gentleman behind them called out gruffly:

"Will you ladies please put down your umbrellas?"

"What do you mean, sir?" asked one of the ladies angrily.

"I mean that I can't see through a decorated cart wheel." "If you refer to my hat, sir," replied the lady, "I would have you know that it deserves no such appellation. Had you asked us politely to remove our hats we would have done so. As it is we will keep them on."

The man who could not see through a "decorated cart wheel" complained to the manager, who, going to the box occupied by the ladies, remonstrated. By this time they had become incensed and stubbornly refused to remove their hats. The manager then requested them to come into the foyer and when there ejected them from the theater. A complaint for assault has been entered, the ladies asserting that force was used by the manager. Many ladies who object to being ordered to remove their hats at the theaters are interested in knowing how the case will be decided.

Miss Mitvale turned from this item to the advertisements to see what announcements her competitors were making. She came upon a conspicuous advertisement of her own, announcing hats of the latest fashion, just received from Paris. A note was appended which read:

The ladies ejected last night from the theater wore hats made on this model, which was copied from a hat worn by her majesty the queen of England on the occasion of a garden party given at Windsor castle and immediately came into fashion.

When Miss Mitvale went to her shop that morning she found several customers waiting for her. They had come early that they might get in orders ahead of others for "decorated cart wheels" such as they had seen at the theater the evening before. By 11 o'clock the shop was crowded, every woman insisting that her order should be executed at once.

While attempting to pacify them she looked at her window, and there stood Mr. Ferguson peering in with a broad grin on his face. He had sent back the two hats he had used in his theater game. They had been worn by women he had hired. They were already sold.

Mr. Ferguson's dummy hat exhibitors entered a complaint against the manager of the theater for assault. The case was tried, but the charge was not proved. Nevertheless the action attracted much attention, all of which conduced to the increase of Miss Mitvale's business.

Miss Mitvale's fortune was made. From time to time she called on Tom Ferguson for his bill for advertising, but was always put off, he saying that when she saw the amount she would decline to pay. Finally upon her insistence he sent it in. It read:

Miss Adelia Mitvale to Thomas Ferguson debtor. To advertising.....$100.00 Or Miss Mitvale herself. Miss MITVALE decided to pay by self instead of in current funds.
