Victory for High Prices.

Scarcely had the enemies of President Taft chortled their first notes of glee over his "defeat" in the Canadian reciprocity election than word came from half a dozen sources that food prices had taken a decided upward trend. Since the election a number of the more important staples have advanced and the end is not yet, according to market reports. Under these circumstances it is difficult to see where the insurgents are going to make any clear capital out of that "defeat". Certainly the American people as a whole are in no mood to contemplate with patience any further rise in prices of food.

When President Taft proposed reciprocity with Canada he had every food trust opposed to him. He was in reality fighting the food combines, and when the insurgents arrayed themselves in opposition to the president they were in reality helping these monopolies to raise prices. The defeat of reciprocity, regrettable as it is from the standpoint of the American consumer, really shows just how patriotic the efforts of the president were. And there is little indication that the American farmer will profit from the increase in food prices. When the price of flour jumped 30 cents a barrel it did not mean that the farmers would enjoy any part of that advance. For the most] part the wheat upon which this advance was made had been sold already to the millers. It was the same with almost all other things advanced upon the information that reciprocity had been defeated, Ever since the Canadian campaign opened the food trusts have been active. in their efforts to defeat reciprocity. They have printed circulars and sent them broadcast over Canada, stating that annexation was at the bottom of this movement. The agents of the food trusts have openly and flagrantly represented President Taft as seeking annexation. The "victory" of the insurgents was in reality a victory for the food monopolies and the American people will soon come to realize just what was behind their opposition to the president. There will be little consolation for the American housekeeper in the claims of the "reformers" [when it comes to paying the household bills for the next year or so. The increased cost of living is fast becoming the real MOUTH WASH AND POWDER political issue in this country, and with all their bluster and fictitious claims it is a matter of record that not a single insurgent measure or policy would have caused a decline in price of food staple.-Kansas City Journal. In an address at Kansas City this week W. J. McGee, of the department of agriculture said: "During the ten years ending in 1910 the farm area increased only 4.2 per cent and the acreage of improved farms only 15.2 per cent. while the acre value of farm lands increased 108.7 per cent, and the aggregate value no less than 117.4 per cent. This increase is connected with the high cost of living, especially in cities, though the advance in prices has thus far benefited transportation and trade rather than the primary producers; in 1900 we paid our railways $1,650,000,000 and in 1910 about $2,750,000,000, 70 per cent of which was freightage, an advance of 67 per cent; considered as a tax on improved land (justifiably, in that the cost of transportation limits production) this was $4.00 per acre in 1900, and $5.76 in 1910, an increase of 44 per cent, or as a per capita tax, it was $21.73 in 1900, and $30 in 1910, an increase of 38 per cent-all of which ratios of increase are far higher than that of farm prices for farm products.

Proper Method Will Clean Them More Thoroughly and Not In-jure the Gums.

Unless one is taught how to prop-erly use the tooth brush, he is almost certain to use it the wrong way, because it is the easiest way. The usual method has been to brush cross wise of the teeth and if the food does not readily come out, to brush the harder. This is the wrong way, for in so doing you not only fail to do the work well, but also this movement tends to force the gum away from lection. the necks of the teeth, thereby leaving the roots exposed. The gum which lies between the teeth has a very valuable use in protecting the teeth. and in preventing decayed food from lying between them. It is safe to say that in mouths where the gum has been forced away by improper brushing, or otherwise, the teeth are much more apt to decay. The proper method of brushing the teeth is with an up and down or a rotary motion. In this movement, the bristles of the brush should strike the gum above the upper teeth, and in passing down dislodge the particles of food between the teeth. With the lower teeth reverse the motion; that is, the brush should first touch the gum below the teeth and then be carried up. In other words, the stroke should always be made towards the cutting edge of the tooth, thus forcing the gums on the teeth. The friction of the brush on the gums is very beneficial to them, but often this will cause bleeding. In such cases if cold water is applied with the brush until the bleeding stops, and if this be done every day. the gums will begin to harden, and the trouble will cease. If there should be any gum disease, or any deposits under the gum, such as tartar, it will be best to have the gums treated and the foreign matter removed.

Parents should be careful to teach the child the use of the tooth brush at a very early age, and the habit once formed at that period is bound to be continued. When it is known that decay will never attack a perfectly clean tooth, we realize the importance of the tooth brush. We cannot hope, even with the brush, to have perfect cleanliness, but we know that good thorough brushing is a wonderful help.

If the teeth are brushed after each meal and just before going to bed. it usually will be sufficient. The most important time is at bed time. for then the fluids of the mouth are not flowing, and the food that lies between the teeth invites decay.

The time when teeth decay the worst is in childhood, and if parents only knew the responsibility that was theirs to see that the teeth of their children were kept clean, there would be fewer people going through the world with disfigured mouths and artificial substitutes. Not only this but much of the ill health of the world, caused by the lack of proper chewing of food, would be eliminated. (Copyright, Western Newspaper Union.)

The success of municipal water and light plants seems to depend altogether on the way they are managed. We are in receipt of a paper from Sioux Falls, S. D., which says that the plant there is a burden to the tax-payers, the receipts being much less than the fixed charges. On the other hand the water and light plant at Grand Island is proving a paying proposition for the city.

The Daily Telegraph reported that the three men who compose the municipal league, had concluded to disband. This, however, was a mistake, for the trio are out with a lengthy circular "knocking" on the city hall bonds.

ALCONT.

These Should Be Selected for Individual Conditions-How the Gums Should Be Massaged.

The teeth decay in those places that are not kept clean. To keep the teeth clean various mouth washes, tooth pastes, powders and brushes have been devised.

Many of these agents have some beneficial effects, while others do no good, and possibly harm. But we must concede the fact that up to the present time these agents are as effective as any we know to keep the mouth comparatively clean and to prevent accumulations in and around, and especially between the teeth.

While it is a recognized fact that the indiscriminate use of powders and mouth washes is not the best for the teeth and gums, still the use of tooth brushes, together with suitable powders and washes is of great importance. But the kind of medicinal agent that each individual should use should be left to some one who is competent to instruct the patient. As to the particular means of applying this agent advice should also be given. as the teeth and gums in individuals differ practically as much as their hair and eyes.

The wash will pass between the teeth, or at least it should pass between most of the teeth, and in this way take out the greatest portion of food and other foreign matter that Piano moving a specialty. Up-to-date may collect there. This collection dif. 1911 piano truck. Office hours 8 a.m. fers in different individuals, depending upon their relation to each other.

The different kinds of gum discase demand different mouth washes and often a patient will condemn a good mouth wash which fails to effect a cure when the trouble is that it is not adapted to that diseased condition. In diseases of the gum, particularly in pyorrhea, it is well to massage the gum. This is a splendid means of stimulating the tissue and causing it to creep forward in those places where it normally belongs. Before we attempt gum massage we should see that the toeth are as clean as possible and that all foreign matter on the roots is removed. Gum tissue will not adhere or lie in close adaptation to the roots of teeth on which there is tartar or an accumulation of food debris.

The best way to massage the gum is with the thumb and fingers, rubbing the gum toward the cutting edge of the tooth. There are few people that normally have clean mouths and when one has learned to keep one's teeth The F. C. Ayres Mer.
