However, there is one thing certain, the trees were badly damaged.

The trees in front of the Water Works is a favorite roosting place for the sparrows of the neighborhood. About sundown, they come in thousands, and when a missile is thrown into the branches, they fly out in clouds. A Pleasant Function.
The benefit dance given at the Lloyd Friday evening under the auspices of the band and the ball team was fairly well patronized, about seventy-five couples taking part in the dancing. There was a liberal attendance of spectators who were attracted there by the concert which the band gave preceding the opening dance. The music for the dancing was furnished by the full band, and was therefore excellent—there was not a dance that was not encored. The merriment continued until midnight, and attendants pronounced it a very enjoyable dance.

The receipts were not sufficient to meet the deficit in the treasuries of the band and team, but "every little helps."

After being out for four hours the jury which heard the case brought by Myles Kelleher of Marshalltown, Iowa, against the Iowa Central railway returned a verdict of $12,500 for Kelleher. The plaintiff was a former engineer of the company. He was injured in 1908, when a side rode of his engine broke, fracturing the knee pan of his right leg. One of the principal claims set up in his case was that owing to a protracted strike of the shop men there, strike-breakers were employed and that they were incompetent and careless and did not carefully inspect and repair the engine which Kelleher was running when he was injured. He sued for $25,000, the case being brought in the name of J. W. Breene, assignee. The company offered to settle for $3,500 but Kelleher wanted $5,500 in payment for his claim.
