Greek Attempts Suicide.

Gus Gust, a Greek, attempted to take his life Friday night, and came within an ace of accomplishing his desire. He cut his throat from ear to ear, but did not get deep enough to sever the wind-pipe. Gust was in the south part of town when he made this attempt on his life, and after doing the act he fell, or laid down, and his groans attracted the attention of Mr. Gray, living near by, who upon search discovered the Greek, took him to his house and phoned for Dr. Twinem, who found the fellow in a rather precarious condition through the loss of blood. Not only had he cut his throat from ear to ear, but he had hacked in a score of places the lower part of his neck. Dr. Twinem sewed the wound and the patient was removed to Greek headquarters on Front street.

Gust had been working in the west part of the state and came here to look for work. Failing to secure employment, he grew despondent and this led him to commit the deed. He had at the time, however, $40 stowed away in his stocking.

Weather Record Broken.

North Platte was in the grasp of a winter storm Saturday and Sunday, the temperature on Sunday dropping to four below zero. Saturday morning was ushered in with a strong northwest wind and a light fall of snow, the temperature during the day standing from one to four above zero. Saturday night the wind ceased, and the following morning there was a drop to four below. This latter temperature was the lowest ever recorded at the local weather bureau up to that date in November, and only twice has any November shown as low a temperature on any day during the month, these exceptions occurring during the latter part of that month in 1896.
