Mobier Predicts Four Tracks.

A Cheyenne dispatch dated November 24th says:

President Mohier, of the Union Pacific railroad, asserted at a banquet tendered by business men here, that within ten years the road will operate four tracks between Omaha and North Platte.

The statement was made in reply to the rumor that the Union Pacific proposed to abandon the main line between Laramie, Wyo., and North Platte, Neb. He scoffed the idea, explaining that the road is now being double tracked.

Into the Jaws of Defeat.

The foot ball team of the Kearney high school came to North Platte last Friday and walked into the jaws of defeat on the local field in the afternoon. The game was a one-sided affair, the North Platte eleven winning by a score of eight to nothing. The Kearney team was handicapped by having five of the regular players out of the game by reason of injuries sustained either in this game or previous games. Kearney succeeded in making the two yard line, but the locals held them and prevented a touch down. In speaking of the game the Kearney Hub said:

The North Platte people gave the players a splendid reception and showed themselves royal entertainers, several of the players having returned home with shattered hearts as well as shattered hopes.

Campbell Suicides in Denver.

Harold C. Campbell, who three years ago married Miss Jennie Sayre, a former North Platte resident, committed suicide in Denver Friday. The Denver Post gives the following account of the deed:

Arrested on a charge of embezzlement preferred by his employers, Harold C. Campbell, aged 24 years, city salesman for the Austin Candy company, asked permission to comb his hair before going to jail. Deputy Constable Julius Richter, of Justice Morris' court accompanied him to the toilet room at the candy factory and a moment after he had closed the door a shot rang out. When the door was forced open Campbell was lying dead in a corner of the room, with a bullet hole in his right temple.

It is believed Campbell anticipated his arrest and had planned to commit suicide unless he saw some loophole for escape. The revolver with which he shot himself is one he had owned for a number of years, but, according to his young widow, he never carried the weapon and she was unaware he had taken it from the house until informed of his death.

Campbell telephoned his wife in her apartment at the Marcella, 1627 Washington street, less than ten minutes before shooting himself. The officer was then waiting to take him to jail. He said nothing to her of his trouble and when she was told of his suicide she collapsed.

Campbell was married three years ago and was the father of a nineteen-month-old son, Harold, Jr. He came to Denver from Grand Island, Neb., the home of his parents and entered the employ of the Austin Candy company a year ago as a shipping clerk.

Because of efficient service he was advanced to the position of city salesman. He made good and was trusted. Three weeks ago, however, the officials of the company discovered that he was short in his accounts. They spoke to him and he confessed a shortage amounting to nearly $200, declaring he had spent the money "trying to be a good fellow."

The company agreed to give him another chance and he promised to pay back the money he had appropriated. Thursday S. J. Sweet, one of the directors of the concern, discovered another shortage. It was only a small one, but Sweet decided that Campbell was not sincere in his announced intention of repaying the company, so he swore to a warrant for the salesman's arrest. Deputy Constable Richter read the warrant to Campbell and, unsuspecting of the young man's intentions, acceded to the request which gave him the opportunity to carry it out.

Campbell locked the door of the room from the inside and Police Sergeant Batic, who was called in, was forced to break it open with an ax. The body was removed to the morgue.
