BILLIE GREEN.

Of "A Night Out" at the Keith next Tuesday evening, the narrative deals in part in illustrating hereditary influence upon character. Two men, Jack and Paul, are full of life and are ambitious to see the world beyond the social barriers established by a puritanical mother, and are discovered by their grandmother —a generous, broadminded old lady, who loves them devotedly, yet is determined to investigate the places they visit and pass judgment. The boys consent to take her along—they leave the house at night, taking Granmam to a famous cafe. Granmam has no idea of the character of the place, until it is raided by the police. Then she realizes her position and bribes a policeman by offering him a reward for the return of her brooch, which she has lost during the excitement.
