The Liability Bill.

The Nebraska workman's compensation and employers' liability bill, which is to be presented to the next legislature, is based upon the English law, which provides for straight compensation in case of injury on a percentage of earnings of the injured workman. The Washington plan is also being considered, which contemplates state insurance. Under this plan the state becomes an insurance company and the employer and employee pay their premiums to the state to make up the fund from which claims are paid.

Under the proposed law, the employer is directly liable to the injured workman for a percentage of his earnings, without recourse. The Nebraska bill provides for 65 per cent of the earnings, P. Tecumseh Sherman and other experts declare this to be too high and recommend 50 per cent, which is the rate in the English law.

The argument offered against the insurance plan is that all manufacturers and employers of labor must pay their proportion of money into the fund, and help pay the claims of other manufacturers even though they may have no accidents in their own places.

The bill is not yet in its final draft.
