Howe & Maloney.

Fatal Accident.

James Moyer, a resident of Gothenburg, but who had spent the greater of the summer and fall cutting and baling hay on land owned by him near Key-stone, was instantly killed in the west yards about 8:30 Friday evening. Moyer and an acquaintance named Hudson took passage on freight No. 63 at Hershey for the purpose of coming to North Platte. The train arrived here shortly after eight o'clock and pulled down the main line past the east switches of the west yard, and began backing in on the sidetrack. Moyer and Hudson were seated in the caboose, and the conductor remarked to them that they had better get off as the train would not run down to the depot. Both men went out on the rear platform of the caboose, Moyer descending the north side steps and Hudson the south side. The latter concluded to get off on the same side as Moyer and going over dismantled on that side. As he dismantled Moyer was not in sight and Hudson concluded that he, Moyer, had preceded him down the track. He walked rapidly, but failed to find him, and after reaching town visited several rooming houses in search of Moyer but of no avail. The finding of a mutilated body by an employe of the company at 11:30 proved the sequel to Moyer's sudden disappearance, the mutilation being such as to make the body unrecognizable. Just how Moyer fell beneath the wheels will never be known. He wore a heavy fur overcoat and this may have hampered or tripped him as he attempted to alight, or he may have come in contact with a switch stand as he jumped, and was thrown back under the train. The entire train of cars and the engine passed over the body.

The remains were taken in charge by Coroner Maloney, and later was identified by J. E. Smith, an employe of the North Platte laundry, who recognized the corpse as his uncle, James Moyer. The coroner's verdict attached no blame to the railroad company.

Col. W. F. Cody is going to give away one of the choicest lots in "Cody's Addition" watch for the plan next week.

District Court Opens.

The December term of district court convened yesterday morning and will have a steady grind until Christmas. Yesterday was devoted principally to a call of the docket, and this morning the jury reported for service. There are over 150 cases on the docket, about thirty of which will be tried to a jury.

Increased Postal Receipts.

Postmaster Davis says the postal receipts for last month show an increase of thirty per cent over the receipts for November of last year. That is certainly a very gratifying growth, and in a measure represents the increase in the business of the town, postal receipts being regarded as one of the indexes of the volume of trade of a town or city.

Lots in "Cody's Addition" is 44x132 feet. You can buy one lot or a half block. The half block will cost you no more than a lot six blocks this side of the addition.
