Dr. Quigley Tells of His European Trip

Aug. 6, 1913.

We arrived in Gibraltar at night and anchored in the bay at the foot of the great rock. Very early in the morning we were taken ashore in a tender and put in the forenoon inspecting the place. The rock is fortified at different levels and holes from which cannons may be forth their shot and shell are scattered all over the sheer face overlooking the strait. We know these honeycomb places are for cannon, for we were there on a great celebration day and we saw them shoot round after round. We were very close to the largest gun on the grounds. It is a monster that would seem to be able to guard the strait by itself. There is another enormous gun mounted at the very top of the rock but it looks like a toy pop gun from the water level, in fact the rock towers so high in the air that this great gun can hardly be seen with the naked eye.

It does not rain much at Gibraltar so they have a system of catching the water that does fall on the rock and storing it in cisterns. We saw the English soldiers drill. They are nearer like wooden men than anything we ever saw, not even an eye wink out of time. There was a greater mixture of races here than in any place in Europe where we visited. Turks, Arabs, Moors, Europeans and negroes all in their native dress. Spanish lace goods were offered very cheap here. We went unwillingly back to our boat and at noon were headed into the Mediterranean sea. Sardinia was not interesting—a barren rocky coast—but we picked up our ears when we woke up one morning and looking through the port hole we saw a smoking mountain with a crescent shaped city at the foot of it. We went on deck and found that we were getting into Staples. Old Vesuvius is not dead. It always smokes and steams and at times it snorts and then a stream of lava comes rolling down its side. There is a good deal of color in Naples but the people are all beggars or robbers and dirt is everywhere so it is truly a case of "see Naples and die" if you cannot escape. We had one experience in Naples with a crazy cab driver in the worst quarter of the city late at night, which would make an exciting, hair raising story but it is too long. We escaped to Rome and on the way was disappointed with the country. It is not the fertile garden we believe it to be in America. It cannot hold a candle to the Platte River valley. Rome is wonderful and of all the wonderful things in Rome the greatest is St. Peter's. What millions and millions of dollars have been spent on this great cathedral in the centuries it has stood. No one can comprehend St. Peter's without seeing it and it alone is worth a trip to Europe. The Roman ruins we found interesting, the Coliseum, the forum, the baths of Caracalla, etc., but they were not as interesting as the ruins of Pompeii which we went through near Naples. In Rome and in Naples we found lots of flies but nowhere else in Europe. The hotel keepers seemed much put out when we objected to the flies. They consider them household pets. They use no screens anywhere in Europe. We went to the American college (which is a college for educating American young men for the priesthood) to get tickets to see the pope and Bishop Kennedy very graciously supplied us. We were told to be at the Vatican by 4:30 on a certain day and we would receive the pope's blessing at 5:00. We arrived promptly at the hour and found a large crowd also waiting. The famous Swiss guards and other soldiers in the most gorgeous trappings and uniforms were drawn up in lines at every turn and we had to pass between these lines. I had about gotten through into the inner court when a soldier with about $400 worth of gold lace and linen clad my kodak. He told me in Italian that I could not take it in. I offered it to him but he backed up. He directed me to a side room down a flight of stairs where some soldiers were on guard but at the sight of the kodak they threw up their hands and would have nothing to do with it. I began to see that they were afraid it was an infernal machine that I had brought in to blow up the pope. The soldiers sent me to another group nearer the exit and when these showed the same signs of fear and seemed to want to gradually work me out on the street, I decided that I would take the thing in and if necessary rout the Swiss guards with my kodak. I said a few bad words to them in English put the kodak over my shoulder and boldly marched in paying no attention to anybody. After I had again gotten to the inner court a silver mounted white faced guard came running up to me and I gave him the kodak. He took it out quickly expecting, I am sure, at every step that it would go off.

The pope is a ruddy faced, strong healthy looking man and did not show any evidence of ever being sick. As he gave his blessing some of the people present were quite overcome with emotion. It was a good psychological study. One monk near us as soon as the blessing was finished started screaming at the top of his voice and other susceptible people took it up so that almost pandemonium reigned for a few moments. Of course it was all in the nature of the most fervent worship with no disorder. Most people carried large bundles of things to receive the Pope's blessing and we took some cards for this purpose to send afterwards to our North Platte friends.

I met Dr. Woods Hutchinson, the famous writer, in the clinic of Prof. Bastimella in Rome. He promised to stop off in North Platte in January and deliver a lecture. When he found that I was from North Platte he said he knew the town very well as he had a horse ranch at Ogalalla and often stopped off at North Platte. At Florence we saw the famous bronze doors which Michel Angelo said were beautiful enough for the gates of heaven. From there to Venice we went through 49 tunnels in the mountains and got into Venice in the middle of night, by moonlight. This is the correct way to get into Venice as the canals are supposed to show up better by moonlight but the canals smelled bad and the gondola drivers were the fiercest most lawless bunch of humans we ever encountered so it did not make a good impression on us. We rode in gondolas about 2 1/2 miles to our hotel with a gondolier who looked as though he would like to cut our throat any minute and who swore most viciously at every other gondolier whose boat came near his. And the other fellows swore back so we did not know what minute they would all begin hitting each other over the heads with the oars.

St. Mark's square is the beauty spot of Venice. Here as in Florence the most beautiful statuary and pictures are offered at very low prices but the high American duty presents one from buying them. We had the most interesting experiences in Vienna, Dresden, Berlin, Cologne and Paris which I will describe in another letter if this does not find the waste basket.

Each Team takes two Games.

The North Platte and Kansas City Red Sox divided honors in the four games of ball played on the local diamond, the visitors winning the two games played Friday and Saturday, and the locals annexing the two games Sunday afternoon.

In Friday's game the visitors won by a score of three to two, and in Saturday's game five to four. In Sunday games the scores were fourteen to six, and twenty-one to six.

The first two were fast games, and though errors were largely responsible for the scores, they were as good exhibitions of the game as one would care to see. The Sunday games were less interesting, but provided very good amusement for the 800 or 900 people who witnessed them. The high scores made by North Platte resulted from strong batting; every player being able to connect with the ball. In the first game twelve scores were made in one inning.

The Red Sox will return for four more games. These will be played Friday, Saturday and Sunday afternoons, with a double-header on Sunday. The Kansas City team is considered by many the equal of the Kearney state league team. Be this as it may, the coming games promise to be well worth attending.

Will Open Bowling Alley.

Chas. Empe, who had leased the Le-Master room on east Sixth street, has cancelled the lease, and the room has been rented to the Whitcomb Bros., of Columbus, who will open a bowling alley. J. E. LeBlanc, of Bridgeport, secretary of the Nebraska Irrigation Association, has issued a call for a meeting of the executive committee in this city Tuesday of next week. The object of the meeting is to fix a day for the fall convention and transact other business. The state convention this year promises to be a most enthusiastic one and will largely attended.
