RARE PRESENCE OF MIND

At Least It is to Be Supposed Young Lady's Mother Regarded it as Such.

Speaking of rare presence of mind recently recalled to ex-President Taft the case of a handsome young woman of his acquaintance. She had gone to the railway station to meet a man friend of the family, and when he debarbed from the train the young man lost his head and impulsively kissed her. The girl thought it the part of prudence to tell her mother of the affair, upon which the latter was simply horrified.

"You don't mean to tell me that he had the impudence to kiss you?" she cried. "And to think of the crowd at the station! Why, my dear, what did you do in such an embarrassing situation?"

"Why, mother, I just kissed him back, of course. I wanted to give all those people the impression that we were relatives."—The Sunday Magazine.

HOW THE STREETS OF PARIS ARE CLEANED

In Paris, where the automobile was popular before the American manufacturer ever thought of bringing it to the perfection of its present state, the street cleaning department has started an innovation in the removal of the garbage and accumulation of refuse; by using a specially constructed motor truck for this purpose. The body of the car is built of galvanized sheet with covers of the same material so arranged that they slip over one another, thereby hermetically sealing the car when loaded. Covered over as it is, the spectacle of an army of flies following in the wake of the garbage wagon, so familiar to the sight of Americans, is eliminated, and the odors which ordinarily arise from a wagon load of garbage are not forced upon the people as in our own big cities.

POET WHO WAS ASSASSIN DECREASE IN NURSES

Lacenaire's Career—He Could Laugh and Commit Murder.

Before Being Brought to Justice Slay-er Lived by Making Verses and Spurious Paper—All Paris Sang His Songs.

Paris.—On December 4, 1834, a gentleman of distinguished appearance walked briskly along a quiet street near the Chopinette Barrier in Paris. It is true that the gentleman's black frock coat gave evidence of long use and the gentleman's hat was a trifle ancient and the gentleman's cravat was not exactly fashionable. But, name of a name, messieurs, one may be a gentleman and be poor.

This pedestrian, who looked distinguished even under the handicap of threadbare garments, was about thirty-five year old. He was rather small of stature, but carried himself proudly. His face was refined and intellectual—the face of a poet and dreamer. Indeed, at that hour all Paris was whistling and singing one of his songs, "The Fife and Drum." He had the hands and hair of an artist and the joyous, care free laugh of a boy. It was a good thing to hear Lacenaire laugh. It reminded you of your halcyon days, before the world weariness made you sad.

Behind Lacenaire there walked a man of vulgar appearance. His name was Avril. He was quite young, not more than twenty-two, and he had been so unfortunate as a criminal that Lacenaire was sorry for him and was determined to give him a chance to do better work.

Presently they stopped before a dwelling of prosperous appearance. "This is the place," said Lacenaire. "Do you remember my instructions? Yes? Then allons vite!"

The poet rang the door bell and the door was opened by a young man.

"Ah, my dear Chardon," cried Lacenaire, "we have come to see your mother on a trifle of business—the mere signing of a paper."

"We are greatly honored, M. Lacenaire," replied Chardon. "Mother, as you know, is an invalid, and is on her bed, but she can do what you ask."

They stood face to face, Chardon and Lacenaire, and the latter gossiped gayly on one thing and another, while Avril stole quietly behind Chardon, and, having stationed himself properly, at a wink from the poet he threw his arm around Chardon's neck and garroted him. Lacenaire drew a dagger then and stabbed the victim several times, to make the job complete, then he went to the room of the invalid mother and slew her with the weapon that killed the son.

"There should be 10,000 francs here somewhere, according to my information," said Lacenaire. "Lock the door, my friend, and we'll search till we find the money."

Avril locked the door and they searched and searched, but all they found was 500 francs. Lacenaire, whose sense of humor was abnormally developed, laughed until the tears rolled down his cheeks. It was this insensibility, displayed on many tragic and harrowing occasions, that made him one of the most famous criminals of modern times.

"Is the joke on us or on the Chardons?" he asked, as he wiped the joyous tears from his face. But Avril was impatient and nervous. He wanted to get away. Those dead people were getting on his nerves. So they left the house and went to an inn, where, over sundry bottles of cheap wine, Lacenaire planned a larger and better crime.

He rented an office and painted an assumed name on the door, thus creating the impression that he was a business man. Then, by laying his plans carefully, he arranged that a bank messenger should call on him in his office on a certain day, the chosen day being one on which collections were sure to be large. It took a great deal of skillful maneuvering to bring this about, but the details are not essential to this story.

Everything being in readiness, Avril was so foolish as to be arrested while trying to rescue a lady friend from the police. Avril's conscience became active and he told of the Chardon murders. So it came to pass that the poet was arrested, and when he learned that the discovery was due to his accomplice he made full and free confession, his only object, he said, being to take the betrayers to the gallotie with him.

FRENCH WOMEN FOR ARMY

Madame Dieulafoy, Well Known Explorer, Suggest Scheme Covering the Innovation.

Paris.—The scheme of Madame Dieulafoy, the well known woman explorer, for introducing women into posts hitherto filled by men in the army administration, was given in detail by Madame Dieulafoy herself at a conference held in the theater of the Comedie des Champs Elysee.

She did not, she said, claim for women places in the active army, but there was much that they could do in the administrative work. That they were capable of this was proven by the fact that 155,800 women were already employed in departments of state.

Of the 23,190 subalterns in the reserve and in the territorial forces, 4,137 were employed in administrative functions. It is the work of these men that Madame Dieulafoy considers women are fitted to take, thus freeing the men for active service. At the close of her conference, Madame Dieulafoy announced that the minister of war had ordered an inquiry to be instituted into the possibility of her request being put into force.

Training Schools Less Popular Than in Former Times.

Head of Big Training Hospital Declares That Women Are Beginning to Prefer Other Work for Various Reasons.

New York.—Is nursing as a profession for women on the decline? Representatives of a training school affiliated with one of the smaller public hospitals in this city answered this question in the affirmative. And they gave as a reason for a decrease in attendance the fact that there are so many other professions now open to women that comparatively few choose to follow the old-fashioned womanly profession of caring for the sick.

It was the head of a big hospital training school in East Twentieth street who declared that nursing is declining as a popular profession. "Women prefer other work for various reasons," she said. "Until this year we always have had as many applicants as we could accommodate in our training school, but now we have been unable to fill the beginning class.

"There are scores of new professions and new kinds of work opened to women now which used to be closed to them or were unknown a few years ago. Ten years ago nursing was one of the finest occupations for women who were forced to earn their own living. Now it is one of many by which they may become self-supporting."

The director and superintendent of the New York Hospital Training School for Nurses said:

"There is not the same future in nursing as in most of the other professions. This fact has led to some discouragement among women who have graduated in the profession and who have hoped to keep on rising year after year. A trained nurse earns just the same when she takes her first case as she does after she has had several years' experience. Her skill and knowledge are worth no more than when she graduated a full-fledged trained nurse.

"Only in institutional work does a graduate nurse receive more money and assume greater responsibilities. But institutional positions are comparatively few and the applicants for them are many. So, you see, there is not much of a future for nurses.

"Of course, a trained nurse makes a living and a good living, but she cannot save much, for the cost of almost everything is higher now than it was two or three years ago. A nurse has to pay her room rent, she must dress well and have a supply of uniforms, and it is expensive to keep these fresh. A trained nurse must live where there is a telephone or she must have one of her own, and this is another item of expense.

When asked if there were as many training school pupils from Canada as there used to be, the superintendent said that the number had decreased, and she accounted for this by the fact that Canada has established recently many new and fine hospitals, which maintain excellent training schools for nurses.

"On the whole I think that Canadian young women make the best nurses we have. They are quiet, they have delightful manners and they can always be relied on. Besides, the young women from across the border seem to have greater physical endurance than American women. It may be because they have had less money to spend and have been reared more wholesomely and in a more rugged climate, especially the girls from Nova Scotia and other northern provinces.

"I account for their quiet and charming manner by the fact that many who become nurses are from clergymen's families and they have had the best possible home training. Usually they are girls with many brothers and sisters and they have had to learn the lesson to give and take."

Penalty of Having Too Much Rope. "I note that Mexico is again peevish at the United States," commented Basil Garret. "This reminds me of the familiar yarn of the negro who was about to be hanged for the murder of another negro, and, after a lengthy and rambling farewell to the world addressed the widow who, fat, black and pessimistic, sat in front of the scaffold: 'De Lawd in his infinite wisdom has done fufgivern muh sins and innickerties, and now I axes yo', Sistah Warkins, to fufgive me, and—' Aw, git hung, nigger!' impatiently interrupted the bereaved lady. 'Git hung!' Mexico having been given an abundance of rope, I am grimly awaiting the inevitable outcome. I am of the same attitude of mind, too, toward the person or persons, as the case may be, who has or have, been so long messing with and muddling up the gas situation."—Kansas City Star.

SPEAKS FOR ITSELF Experience of a Southern Man.

"Please allow me to thank the originator of Postum, which in my case, speaks for itself," writes a Fla. man. "I formerly drank so much coffee that my nervous system was almost a wreck. (Tea is just as injurious because it contains caffeine, the drug found in coffee.) My physician told me to quit drinking it but I had to have something, so I tried Postum.

"To my great surprise I saw quite a change in my nerves in about 10 days. That was a year ago and now my nerves are steady and I don't have those bilious sick headaches which I regularly had while drinking coffee.

"Postum seems to have body-building properties and leaves the head clear. And I do not have the bad taste in my mouth when I get up mornings. When Postum is boiled good and strong, it is far better in taste than coffee. My advice to coffee drinkers is to try Postum and be convinced."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Write for copy of the little book, "The Road to Wellville." Postum comes in two forms: Regular Postum—must be well boiled. Instant Postum is a soluble powder. A teaspoonful dissolves quickly in a cup of hot water and, with cream and sugar, makes a delicious beverage instantly. Grocers sell both kinds. "There's a reason" for Postum.
