

ing as lazily as he walked. He was a city chap, who had been ordered by his physician to go to the country, even though the January winds were blowing cold, and recuperate. He was thinking as he walked what a humdrum thing life was, to be sure, how free from any kind of ris por excitement his own individual life was and how when he was "bowled over," as he an animalcule, so small that he could not see it, entering his system, increasing and multiplying vigorously, the colony at last eating him up.

Strange it is how often fate is doing with us what we least suspect. At the moment this last idea entered George Carroll's brain a death dealing force was driving at him from behind. A shadow, accompanied by the sound of horse's hoofs, shot transversely before him. Turning, he saw a girl on horseback in a red coat, moving between him and a bull that was making for him, the girl glancing backward as she rode to observe the bull. She was about to turn and ride back again when the bull caught sight of her, abandoned the straight line he was following in the direction of the man and turned his attention to the girl.

Now, George in regard to all mat ters pertaining to the country was very stupid. He did not realize that he was or had been in any danger. He did not gather from what he saw that this girl, seeing the bull going for him, had leaped a fence and ridden between him and his enemy for the purpose of turning the animal from him to herself. Instead of thus taking in the situation and getting out of the field as soon as possible, he stood looking at the bull chasing the girl.

The inclosure was about ten acres. and George stood near the middle of it. The girl led the bull as far as possible from him, then turned and, eluding the aniatal as dexterously as a toreador. galloped away in the opposite direction. By that time it began to dawn upon the city man that the horse and the girl were being pursued by the bull for the purpose of goring. But not even yet did he realize that she had taken this danger upon herself for the purpose of saving his life; that had it not been for her a pair of horns would have taken him in the back. broken it and the earthly spark of his existence would have gone out forever. What occupied George Carroll's mind to the exclusion of all else was the danger that threatened the girl and what he could do to relieve her from her perilous position The only thing he could do was to run for the fence as fast as his legs could carry him and climb over it. If he had done this the elimh nave made ner exit as she had made her entrance-by urging her horse over that same fence. She was walting for him to get out of the field before securing her own safety.

a Quick Retreat by the Inmates and a Display of Presence of Mind. Two of the first English settlers in the town of Addison, VL, were John Strong and Zadok Everest. Early in the fall of 1776 Strong and Everest had to go to Albany for provisions. Pioneer women seldom worried, but for some reason Molly Strong felt uneasy after her husband had gone. She expressed it, it would probably be by and her sons got in a good supply of fuel and did the chores early.

When they came back to the cabin the baby was crying for his supper, and Mrs. Strong gave him a cup of warm milk and sat him down in front of the fireplace. She had just swung the kettle of samp from the fire when she heard a noise. Looking round, she saw the blanket that served for a door swing aside as a great bear thrust her head into the room. The children screamed, and the bear backed out in haste, but Molly Strong knew that she would return.

"Quick, children!" she said as she caught up the baby. "Climb the ladder. Let sister go up first, now Johnnie, now Frank-hurry, hurry!"

When the others were safe in the loft Mrs. Strong climbed up with the baby and drew the indder after her. She laid it across the hole, and then she and the children sat down and waited. The floor of the loft was made of round poles laid closely together, but not fastened. It was dangerous to move about on it.

Peering down through the pole floor, they listened and watched for the bear to come back. They could hear her moving round the house, and once a big paw crashed through the oiled paper at the window hole. Finally she came to the door and, after blinking uncertainly at the fire, walked in. Two cubs followed her. The old bear presently upset the pan of milk on the inble, and the cubs began to lap it up eagerly

"I'd like a taste of that myself." Frank whispered.

"So would I," Johnnie replied. "I'm awful hungry."

Next, the bear found the pudding kettle and took a mouthful of the boiling samp. Jumping back with a cry of pain and rage, she broke the pot with a swift blow of her paw, and then sat up on her haunches, growling and whining, and began to dig the pudding out of her mouth. The cubs sat and watched her in grave wonder.

That was too much for the children. who burst into laughter. Instantly the bear gave a loud roar and rushed toward the hole with the ladder across it. Mrs. Strong gave hurried orders:

"Get me a pole, Frank, quick! Now. get another. Punch her if she tries to Be careful. Don't fall through."

Dutchmen who settled New York, then called New Aresterdam, early in the seventeenth century, brought the custom with them from Holland. On the first New Year's day in the little town nestling about the fort on the point of Manhattan Island probably not a hundred, possibly not fifty, men made calls.

From where the New York custom house now stands east, west and north, for a distance perhaps of 500 yards, which embraced the town, on Jan. 1, the good housewives having spent the previous week in scrubbing, sweeping, dusting and polishing their homes, put on all the petticoats they possessed and in cap and collar sat themselves down in their parlors to receive callers.

Now, the day before one of the earliest of these New Year's days a bargain was struck between Katrina Van Gaasbeck and her mother. Frau Van Gaasbeck wished her daughter to marry Diedrich Van Dusen, a rich shipowner, while Katrina preferred Anthony Van Horn, a young fur trader. I have called the former of these men a rich shipowner, and he certainly was, for he was the possessor of a sloop fully thirty feet long, on which he carried supplies to the settlers along the East river as far as Hell Gate and along the North river as far as Spuyten Duy-

The bickerings between mother and daughter had for months past been embittering the life of the husband and father, Peter Van Gaasbeck. No sooner did he come home from his work in the evening, pour out a cup of schnapps and light his pipe than the clatter commenced, and he was driven distracted. On this day before New Year's that has been mentioned when the turmoil commenced he cried out: "Settle this matter between you, or, by St. Nicholas, I will go back to Holland on the next ship that sails, leaving you two here to fight it out!" "How settle it?" asked mother and daughter at once.

"Tomorrow will be New Year's day. Some time between morning and evening Diedrich Van Dusen and Anthony Van Horn will each make a call here. Let it be agreed between you that the one who calls nearest to the stroke of the town clock at noon shall be the favored suitor."

Frau Van Gaasbeck was loath to accept this arrangement, for she did not trust her daughter, and Katrina was loath to accept it because she did not trust her mother, but each consented. thinking herself sufficiently sharp to outwit the other.

Then Peter settled himself to his bottle of schnapps and his pipe with reat contentmont

NOTICE FOR PUBLICATION

It is singular how a brave man may be a fool, or, rather, is not a good deal of what we call bravery folly? George by his stupidity was leaving both himself and the girl in danger. She could see him standing there gaping at her. but was so close pressed that she was unable to make a sign to him to fly for his life. Nearing the opposite end of the field, she turned her head to see George running toward her! She could have jumped the fence, but when she saw the man she was trying to save hurrying again into danger, instead of saving herself she turned nie. "I'm too hungry!" about and started again across the field. If she went near the man the bull might leave her and turn upon him. So she galloped diagonally across the field, making an effort at a sign for him to leave it. But he did not understand and, turning, continued his pursuit of her.

Then followed events in such quick succession-so quick that George could searcely separate them. He saw the horse stumble and fall; he saw the bull's horns go into the horse's belly; he heard a report, and the bull, too, fell to the ground. A man dropped a gun, dashed to the fence and, jumping it, ran to where the girl was trying to get up from the ground. George and the man reached her at the same time. The man lifted her up, and she stood on her feet.

"Are you killed?" asked the man. "No; not even hurt."

Then the man turned to George.

"For heaven's sake," he cried, "how In the world have you escaped the fool killer all these years?"

"He's not a fool at all," said the giri; "he's a brave man. He didn't realize his own danger, he was so intent upon mine."

When George Carroll realized what the girl had done for him and how he had stupidly come very near being the cause of her death he was paralyzed. As it was, he had been the cause of tue loss of her horse and a bull worth $100 had been shot. Fortunately George had a fortune and could repair the monetary damage. The rest of it could not be paid for in that way. But fate, when George was walking across the field regretting the uneventful tenor of his life, had another purpose. All this chain of events was but one of fate's tricks to make a match. The girl reaped her reward by helping George spend this income.

The baby, awakened by the noise, be gan to wall, and Mrs. Strong soothed him with one hand while with the pole in the other she warded off the bear. The little girl clung crying to her mother's skirts, but the boys each had a long pole and prodded the bear through the rungs of the ladder. The bld brute finally shuffled off toward the door. She pulled down the blanket and tore it into shreds; then she went out, followed by her cubs.

you think she'll come back, mother? "I expect she will, son, but we can manage her-if we keep awake."

"I won't go to sleep!" groaned John-

Nevertheless, the silent wait in the dimly lighted loft made them all drowsy, and before the bear returned Mrs. Strong knew by their heavy breathing that the children were asleep. It was near midnight when the bear came in and renewed her efforts to reach the loft. Mrs. Strong rapped her sharply with her pole, and there was a roar that brought the boys to their feet.

Dazed and only half awake, Johnnie ran across the loft. His foot slipped into a gap between the poles, and as he fell other poles spread apart. Down he went into the room with the bear and her cubs. The bear did not see him fall, but she faced about at the noise and started toward him.

Quick as a flash, Mrs. Strong brought her pole down on the nearest cub and pinned him to the floor. The bear turned to rescue her squealing offspring, and Frank urew his brother up into the loft unharmed.

No injury to herself could have weakened the old bear's courage like the attack on her cub, and although at intervals she slouched in and out of the cabin, she made no further attempt to reach the loft. As it grew light, Mrs. Strong, watching through the chinks in the wall, saw her lead her cubs across the clearing into the woods.

As soon as she thought it safe she lowered the ladder and the family came down. They saw no more of the bear. and when Mr. Strong came home he made the cabin secure with a door made from basswood slabs and hung on wooden hinges. - Youth's Companlon.

Descases of Women and Children a Specia

Before 9 o'clock that night, when all New Amsterdamers were in bed, the suitors had each been informed by the one who favored him of the arrangement and instructed to make his call at the moment the clock struck 12. Diedrich Van Dusen arose at cockcrow and spent the time between then and noon watching the hands of the town clock. At 8 he put on a second pair of breeches, and every half hour after that he put on another pair, so that by 11 o'clock he was so incased that he resembled a hogshead of gin set upon end on a couple of bricks.

At five minutes of 12 he cast a last glance at the clock and proceeded to the house of Frau Van Dusen. He was received with smiles by both mother and daughter, which made him feel very comfortable, for his rival was not there, it being a minute or two of 12 o'clock, and he had certainly won. He did not hear the clock strike, for Katrina talked so loudly that he could not have heard a gun fired on the Battery. but a hundred yards distant. When he had been in the house half an hour he withdrew, giving place to other callers. Diedrich Van Dusen went home and was taking off some of his breeches. laughing gleefully at having got ahead of his rival, when he heard the town clock strike 1.

"It is 1 of the clock," he said. He had scarcely spoken when there came another stroke. He stopped, with a pair of breeches half off, and listened. There was another and another stroke. When he had counted eleven he paled, and when the twelfth came he was beside himself with anxiety. Pulling on the breeches that he had half removed, he went outside and For Thirty or looked at the clock. The hands stood at 12. Running to Frau Van Dusen's, he looked in through a window and saw his rival with a sausage in one hand and a cup of schnapps in the other. As he looked Anthony swallowed the schnapps.

Diedrich declared that something had gone wrong with the clock, but everybody said:

"How many calls had you made, Diedrich, and how much " hnapps had you drunk ?"

So the poor man got no satisfaction. After the wedding between Anthony and Katrina the bride confessed that her lover, stationed in the belfry, had seen Diedrich call and had then set the clock back. When Diedrich went away Anthony put the clock at five minutes of 12, then went down, to arrive at the Van Dusens' exactly at the stroke of 12.
