

THE REVOLT OF THE TOYS

By WELLS HAWKS.

THE irritated hotel guest was fuming and fuming with the clock because he could not sleep. It was 11 o'clock on Christmas eve, and the throng of merry-makers on the streets made so much noise that stumber on a ground floor was impossible. In a most obliging manner the clerk gave the guest an inside room on the sixteenth floor in place of his suit with windows opening on the street.

Outside a throng of merry people noisily, happily awaited the coming of the gladdest day in all the year; women and children, old and young, jostled and pushed, blew horns and threw confetti, and the policeman stood on the corner and smiled, and the real people who could not sleep looked out from their windows and laughed and said, "It is so good to see them happy."

But on the sixteenth floor of the big hotel and in the solitude of an inside room a big, selfish man stood and rubbed his hands and smiled because it was so quiet. Once the distant blowing of a horn was heard, and he stood on a chair and stuffed a bath towel into a ventilator.

"Fine, fine!" said he. "Those fools! I'll get some sleep now."

And he undressed and walked about and smiled. Long ago, when the hair just above his ears began to show a little gray, a great wall arose in his life and cut off the past—the past when he was a boy. And dead vines hung about this barrier, and its walls grew thicker and higher until it forced back all of the streams of happiness and for more time. Suddenly the troops moved back again, and around the bed appeared hundreds of tiny tents. The man in the bed groans. They are going to start him out.

The man sticks his head out from the cover for air. His head is hardly out when it is struck by a great rubber ball, and then, like a July storm, when a great cloud breaks, there comes from above a downpour of rubber balls, toothballs, baseballs, jackballs, tennis balls and balls of every description.

They beat on the bed and pummed the man like hail on a bed of roses. He lies still and groans. The shower ceases, and then, with the noise of a hurricane, there comes rushing through the air what seems an African typhoon.

"It is the hoops, the hoops!" cry the wooden soldiers.

And so it is. The air is filled with every kind of hoop, and they roll backward and across the bed like a storm lashed sea. The man screams in pain. Some of the hoops have bells on them, and they ring in his ears as the sharp edges of the bent hickory cut his face. He is weak and pale, but does not give in.

Then there is a clang of bells and a blowing of whistles, and with a rush the entire toy fire department makes for the bed. Following them come the tin locomotives, wildly ringing their bells, and back of them the toy trolleys. The bed looks like a side street during a four alarm fire.

Now the hose connections are made, and scores of streams of water beat on his face. From the foot of the bed comes a cloud of steam from the engines, while hot and blazing above are sparks from the trolleys as they grind along the brass of the bed. He fights hard, but finally succumbs and falls weak and exhausted. The firemen ring their bells and start back for the fire houses, while the soldiers keep back the crowds of brownies, Indians, rubber men, tentmen, jumping jacks and walking monkeys that were clinging around the ropes.

The man watched all this carefully. Then he covered his eyes with his arm. Somehow it all faded away. He seemed to be climbing over a wall. He reached the top and, looking down a pathway, saw a summer house. About it the lilacs fell in great clusters. Looking through the doors, he saw beneath a vista of the cedars and waving maples rows of flower beds, and she was there among them, clipping, training and guiding over trellises the tender blossoms she loved so dearly. In the summer house and on the floor he saw a boy.

He was lying on the floor, while his chubby hands placed about the fort of sand the little soldiers he took from a box. The man sighed. He opened his eyes and looked about him. It was the inside room on the sixteenth floor. It was very quiet. He looked in the glass and saw a tear in his eye. It ran down his cheek, and another came in its place and followed it. Then he threw open the window. Like a tempest it rushed the noise—the blowing of the horns, the chatter of the ratties and the laughter of merry people. He dressed hurriedly. From his satchel he took a portfolio and, taking out a check book, wrote a check and, grabbing his hat, rushed out of the room.

"Cash this for me and in a hurry," said the man to the night clerk.

The clerk went to the safe and brought out a roll of bills. He counted it, but there was not enough, and he opened the petty cash drawer and gave the man all that was there.

"Fine!" said the man, stuffing it into his pocket. "I'll be back in the morning."

The man rushed into the street. Just a half block up a lot of little boys were looking at a cart full of rubber balls. The man handed the peddler a big bill and said, "Give all of these to the boys." The peddler looked surprised, and the boys yelled with glee.

Across the street were a lot of little girls, tired and worn from the day and night's work of running at the cry of "Cash!" but just happy at looking in the windows. Almost like a madman the man pushed them into the store, and soon each had a great doll and a shawl and candy and so many things that are good before they knew it.

Across the street was a man selling boxes of tin soldiers.

"Ah!" said the man, with a triumphant sigh. He jumped on a box and yelled for all the boys around to come near him, and as they did he handed each a box of soldiers and then paid the man twice the cost.

"What is it?" said the man.

"It is Santa Claus gone wild," said a policeman who had children at home.

The man rushed on and into a market. It was very late, and the poor were buying the leftovers for a Christmas dinner. The dealers were packing up the best to save for the New Year's sale.

"Open up!" cried the man as he flourished a roll of bills. And as the multitude of pale and worn went by those in the faded alpaca he reached out and gave them money and said:

"This is to buy for the children," while the dealers poured into the yawning baskets the best on the stalls.

It was morning when he threw himself in bed, tired, but such a good friend. He stretched himself out and fell asleep. And in Shepland he looked out, and there before him, as far as his eyes could reach, were the soldiers all drawn up for review. The tin heads glistened at the head of the column. The parade began to move up the room, then up to the bed and across. He arose and saluted, for as they passed the guns were all at present arms, and the colors dipped as they went before him.

The toys were the victors, but they honored the conquered.—New York Mail.

A Real Genius.

What kinder a feller is Pete Doolittle? "Brighter as a dollar, patient, an' a hard worker."

"Why, he can't hold a job for more'n a week, an' I hear his family ain't got enough to live on."

"Sho; that may be, but what's that got to do with it? You see that meerschaum pipe o' his'n? Colored it himself. You see that there hoochair watch chain he wears? Braided it himself. Notice the peach stone charm hangin' to it? Carved it himself, an' it took two months to finish. See that houn' dawg he's got? Pete trained that dawg to do everything a circus dawg kin do. Ever hear Pete play on the mouth harp an' accompany himself on the guitar? Taught himself. Ever see his handwritin'? Jest like copperplate, all shaded an' flourished, an' he kin make a swan without takin' his pen fr'm the paper. Pete may not keep a job or feed his family, but he's a genius—that's what he is!"—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Presence of Mind.

Colonel Coely ("Buffalo Bill") once told the following story of one of his comrades of the plains known as Wild Bill:

"A man who nursed a grudge against Wild Bill swore to kill him. He stood concealed in a doorway, stepped out and confronted Bill as the latter passed and leveled a pistol at his head.

"I've got you now, Wild Bill!" he said, "and I'm going to kill you, but I'll give you one minute to pray."

"Well," said Bill with an easy smile, "it does look like the jig's up."

"Suddenly Bill peered over the man's shoulder and waved a deprecatory hand.

"Don't hit him, Andy!" he said.

"The man wheeled to protect himself from the supposed enemy in his rear. He gazed into empty space. There was no Andy nor any one else behind him, and before he could turn round again Wild Bill had killed him."

The Wild Boar.

The wild boar is a most courageous animal. The element of luck counts for a great deal in pig sticking, as in most other forms of sport, and it often happens that the foremost sportsman who by dint of hard riding or thanks to the fastest horse has come up with the quarry is deprived of the coveted honor of "first spear" by a sudden "jink" or turn of the pig. The boar, in spite of his clumsy appearance, is not only possessed of a great turn of speed, but is extraordinarily active. He will turn and twist like a hare, putting every obstacle in the shape of bushes, rocks, water, etc., between himself and his pursuers, but all the time making for the nearest patch of jungle and safety. The pace after a pig is faster than the best of runs with hounds, but is sooner over.

Canned Music in Scotia.

Early in the last century an old Forfarshire lady installed in the bedroom corridor of her castle an automatic organ. It was her delight of a morning to wake her guests with its strains. But it was not the delight of one of them, Miss Sophia Johnstone of Hilton, to be so awakened, and she said so.

"Ye dinna like the music? Ye shouldna say that, Sophy," said the hostess. "Ye'll no' win to heaven an' ye dinna take pleasure in music. It's to be all music there, ye know."

"Deed," said the incorrigible one, "an' if heaven's a place w' all wives playin' on hand organs at 6 o'clock in the mornin' it's no the place I tak' it for, nor yet the place I want to be in!"—New Witness.

Handel in Dublin.

There was a period of his life in which Handel, the famous composer, retired from London in a fit of disgust. He went to Dublin, and it was there—in the Dublin Music Hall—that his great masterpiece, "The Messiah," was produced. "The performance," writes D. A. Chappell, "was for the benefit of Mercer's hospital. In order to provide room for a large audience ladies were requested to lay aside their hoops and gentlemen their swords. By this means an audience of 700 was crowded into the space, and the concert realized £400."

Oblong Houses.

Square and oblong houses are cheaper to build than odd shaped structures. The oblong house is cheaper than the square. Timbers come in certain lengths, and the house that is long and narrow takes less timber than one that is square—that is to say, the material cuts to better advantage in the oblong house than in the square house; also less labor is involved in the making.—Pictorial Review.

Indignant Wife—I wonder what you would have done if you had lived when men were first compelled to earn their bread by the sweat of their brows. Indolent Husband—I should have started a little notion store and sold handkerchiefs.—Chicago Tribune.

Flattering Epitaphs.

Charles Lamb, when a little boy, walking in a churchyard with his sister and reading the epitaphs, said to her, "Mary, where are all the naughty people buried?"

Woman's Triumph.

Before she is married a woman's idea of triumph is a man; after marriage her notion of great achievement is to get him to go to church.—Athenian Globe.

That is every man's country where he lives best.—Aristophanes.

smiles that come from childhood's happy memory, and his heart grew light and cold.

"Christmas!" he sneered as he reached for the electric light. "All over the country, I suppose, they are defiling children with the Santa Claus toadyery."

Then it was darkness, and he tucked himself deep down under the covers. A great happiness came over him, for he could not hear a sound, so he closed his eyes and slept easy to him.

Outside the noise grew fast and louder. Only a little time and the bells would ring the midnight hour and it would be Christmas morning. A million houseboys were silent, for beneath them, in their tiny beds, were the fit expectant hearts.

And he in the inside room was snoring. Suddenly he threw his arm up and grabbed the side of the bed. He tossed his legs wildly about and rocked like a man in great agony. Then he was still for a moment, and then suddenly he sat erect and, shaking his fist in the air, exclaimed:

"Back, I say! Back before I fire!"

Let us crawl over the wall around his heart and look. The room is filled with a thousand soldiers—more than that.

There is regiment after regiment. Some are of lead, others of tin, with those making the assault on the bed are wooden. From back of the bureau comes a troop of cavalry, the tin horses fairly galloping as the captain brandishes his sword. From under the washstand comes a battery of artillery. They are placing their guns, the little general, painted so gaudily, is on the man's shoulder. Will he capitulate? There is quiet among the troops. The general comes down and consults for a moment with the commander of the wooden soldiers. The man looks at them with terror. He has asked

NOTICE OF CONTEST.

Department of the Interior, U. S. Land Office, North Platte, Nebraska, Nov. 17, 1913.

To Robert F. Campbell, address unknown, contestant:

You are hereby notified that John E. Koomtz, who resides North Platte, Nebraska, as his post-office address, did on Oct. 25, 1913, file in this office his duly corroborated application to contest and secure the cancellation of your homestead entry No. 24425, serial No. 966, made under act of Feb. 11, 1905, for the whole of section 22, township 12, range 35, west of the Sixth Principal Meridian, and as grounds therefor his contention that said George M. Campbell, the original entryman, was divorced from his wife when he made the above entry and that he died about a year subsequent to entry and prior to making final proof, leaving as his only heir Robert F. Campbell, then a minor but now of age; that said Robert F. Campbell has never made his residence upon said land and has never cultivated the same and has abandoned the same for more than three years last past.

You are, therefore, further notified that the said allegations will be taken as confessed, and your said entry will be cancelled without further fight to be heard, either before this office or on appeal, if you fail to file in this office within twenty days after the fourth publication of this notice, as shown below, your answer, under oath, specifically responsive to these allegations of contest, together with due proof that you have secured a copy of your answer on said contestant either in person or by registered mail.

You should state in your answer the name of the postoffice to which you desire future notice to be sent to you.
