

C. O. Weingand

Slashes Prices

For ten days past C. O. Weingand, the clothier, has been selling Suits and Overcoats at a discount of thirty-three and one-third per cent, and giving a very liberal discount on other classes of merchandise, and the result has been very gratifying to Mr. Weingand and very satisfactory to the purchasing public. There has been an absolute reduction of one-third on the selling price of suits and overcoats--there was no marking up of prices and then a reduction. A $15 suit or overcoat is offered for $10 and the same proportionate cut is made on all suits and overcoats, except blue serge suits, on which the reduction is twenty-five per cent. By offering these liberal discounts, Mr. Weingand is enjoying a big trade and it looks as though the end he desires to attain--that of closing out all suits and overcoats--will be reached.

Like many other clothiers, Mr. Weingand purchased more suits and overcoats last fall than the trade demanded the early part of the season, this being largely due to the open winter we have so far had, and rather than carry them over for another season he is disposing of them at a discount of thirty-three and one-third per cent.

This is certainly a money-saving opportunity for those who need suits, overcoats, shoes, underwear and other articles of apparel. Having been in business so short a time, Mr. Weingand has no old stuff on hand, everything is fresh, the best of fabrics and the latest models. When you buy at Weingand's you get quality goods--the cream of the manufacturers' productions. Adv

Seventy-five students of the high school attempted to "get even" with Principal McGrew yesterday for an imaginary indignity that had been inflicted upon them in the morning session for misconduct. A number of the pupils had been giving some trouble and for punishment they were kept a few minutes overtime after the morning session. They attempted to get it back at Mr. McGrew by staying out that much longer and when they attempted to come in late they were not allowed in the building. They spent the afternoon having a good time and celebrating much after the manner of youngsters and came back this morning ready to resume their school duties like sane and self-respecting human beings.
