A train came in from the east yesterday with one hundred and seven cars. It stopped, as customary, at the Locust street crossing, and when starting pulled out a drawhead on a car in the rear end of the train. In setting out the damaged car and backing up to the other part of the train twenty minutes was consumed and causing a like delay to the one which had the mishap.

As the bridge was blocked, east bound trains No. 2 and No. 8 were also delayed.

"Bringing Up Father," the creations that George McManus has made famous, has been staged, and the company which is producing this rip-roaring farce will visit North Platte during this season. Gus Hill, of the Columbia theatre, New York, writes The Tribune that "Bringing Up Father" is a comedy that calls for one hour and ninety minutes of laughter. It is a play in which the female members of the company will be seen in costumes of all the periods through which this country has passed since the discovery of America. Wherever it has thus far been presented it has aroused wild enthusiasm. North Platte will await the play with great expectancy.

Work on Tunnels Cease.

Two coach loads of laborers from the Burlington extension passed through Bridgeport on Wednesday enroute east, because the money can not be procured to continue them on the pay roll. It is still hoped that arrangements may be made with the contractors to continue a force of men in the tunnel, for if it is found necessary to abandon the work entirely the loss to the company will be heavy.

No one can guess how long the stringency in the money market will continue, but all will hope that the time will be short.

Later:—Two hundred more of the Burlington laborers came down yesterday and it is learned work in the tunnel is now practically abandoned.—Bridgeport Blade.
