War News.

Official reports concerning the campaign in Russian Poland, which were available in the dispatches still failed to make clear the confused situation in the east, where for days a great Russian victory has been claimed in unofficial advices from Petrograd and London.

Earl Kitchener's statement in the House of Commons that the Germans had suffered the greatest disaster in their history, remained open to challenge by Berlin. It is said that powerful Teuton armies, driven on to desperate efforts by the peril of their position, have cut their way through solid lines of enveloping Russians. What it has cost has not yet been told, but it is indicated that the Germans, in extricating themselves have inflicted enormous losses on the enemy.

If it is true that the Germans have freed themselves from the present danger of a crushing defeat in Poland, the situation to the north and south is still pictured as menacing to them. The importance of the campaign to the north is indicated by the fact that Emperor William has gone into east Prussia to direct personally the movements against the invading Russians. Nowhere else is German territory threatened by an invading army, except in a small part of Alsace, which has been helped by the French since the early days of the war. To the south, in Galicia, also the Russians are reported to be pressing forward victorious, surrounding Cracow on all sides.
