Warring Nations Inquiring About Alfalfa Prices.

A Nebraska railroad official is quoted as saying that the warring nations of Europe are beginning to look to Nebraska for forage for the horses at the front and those remaining at home. New York representatives of the English and French governments are sending numerous inquiries to the alfalfa growing belt of the state asking for prices on baled alfalfa hay on board the cars at different stations.

At Gering for instance the going price of alfalfa hay, baled, is $7 to $9 per ton, and these prices which are about the same as maintained at other points in the western part of Nebraska, have been quoted to the New York agents. The freight on baled hay from Gering to New York is 65 cents per 100 pounds, bringing the price up to $21 or $22 laid down in New York. Railroad men here are unable to quote the ocean going rate from New York to Liverpool on baled hay, but under normal conditions they assert it is around 50 cents per 100 pounds, and now probably 20 cents higher, thus making the hay cost $35 or more per ton laid down in England, and to this, they say, should be added a charge of not less than 25 cents for handling.

Regardless of the cost railroad men are of the opinion that not only England and France, but Germany also within a short time will be in the market for hay and other course feed for animals used by the armies, and that the demand will be so acute that they will be willing to pay about any price that may be asked.

The festivities of the evening then held until a late hour.
