JULIUS PIZER, Proprietor.

The New Styles in Printzess Garments are Here.

Before each Printzess Suit or Coat comes to us it has to pass under the scrutiny of seven experts. At seven different stages of its progress it is turned over to these men. They examine it for the slightest imperfection, for the smallest indication that it would not be turned out exactly right. They consult the designer, the cutter, the tailor, the presser. Small chance for even the smallest error to pass; and all is done in your interest, that you may not suffer the vexation, the delay and the disappointment of finding the one garment you liked and wanted imperfect and unfit to wear. That is why we want you to know Printzess Suits and Coats more intimately. The more you know them the higher regard you'll have for them.

Come in and let us explain some of the things that make Printzess Suits and Coats better.

E. T. Tramp & Son.

"September Morn."

"September Morn" direct from the La Salle theatre, Chicago, where it received its premier and became a vogue during an almost incredible run of two hundred and fifty-six consecutive performances, comes to the Keith theatre Wednesday, March 24th.

This brilliant new musical comedy is said to possess an original kink of its own, and is further characterized by dramatic writers of prominence as being "the cleverest jumble of frolicsome fun, ravishing melody and wiggle one-steps ever thrown together"—and, mind you, all this in dead earnest, causes one to wonder whether or not "September Morn" mayn't be, after all, a sort of tango lure.

The book and lyrics were written by Arthur Gillespie, a bright young lyricist, who died just before the presentation of this, his most ambitious work. The music is by Aubry Stauffer, a composer of decided merit. It was staged by the clever Frank Tannahill, Jr., and the dances and ballets arranged and directed by Virgil Bennett, a maitre d'ballet of unquestioned ability.

The company interpreting the forrago, in its full ensemble, numbers some fifty people, a head of which is Grace Childers who will be seen as Argentina, the famous tango dancer.
