Salt Money.

Your salary is your "salt money." Soldiers once received salt as part of their pay. When the salt was formulated for each the latter was called "salerium," salt money, or "salary."

Too Risky.

Officer—Did you get the number of the car? Victim—Yes; but never mind, it was my cook's machine. I don't want any trouble with her.—New York Globe.

At Homes in Egypt.

The method of serving light refreshments during an afternoon call among people in Egypt is somewhat peculiar and may not be generally known to the English people at home. A tray is brought in bearing one or more varieties of jam or sweetmeats, a number of glasses containing water and spoons corresponding to the number of guests present. As the tray is carried around each person takes one of the spoons and, after helping himself to a spoonful of jam, places the used spoon in one of the glasses of water. Sometimes biscuits and cakes are also offered. The custom appears to be of ancient origin. It might be thought that one bowl or glass would suffice for the used spoons, but custom dictates that each person must have a separate glass in which to put the used spoon. The glasses contain pure water, which the guests may drink should they so desire.—London Tit-Bits.

Poison of the Centipede.

The centipede is popularly supposed to carry a sting on each foot, but I have several times handled one after its head was removed without the claws producing any result. It is the first pair of claws only that are venomous, being hollow and provided with poison bags like a snake's fang. The largest I ever saw was eleven inches in length, a grewsome creature. A bite from one of this size would most likely have been fatal to a man in weak health. The tarantula, though his powers of offense are nothing like those of the scorpion or centipede, is, however, a more unpopular character than either. The horror of these large spiders entertained by many people is curious and unaccountable. I have seen Australian bushmen, who in everyday life scarcely seemed to understand danger, turn white as a sheet at the sight of a small "triantelope," as they called it.—Chambers' Journal

Two Things a Corn Crib Must Do

The first thing that a corn crib should afford is thorough ventilation to the stored grain. To secure this, leave the sides as open as possible, and divide the crib into small bins.

The second thing that a corn crib should afford is protection from driving rains and snows. This can be easily done by extending the eaves well down over the sides.

Corn is one of our leading crops. So there is no more important building on the farm than the corn crib. We can help you build the right kind of corn crib—help you with ideas, and supply you the necessary materials. Call on us any time that suits you.
