How to Get Good Roads

When Caesar took a westward ride And grabbed the Gauls for Rome, What was the first thing that he did To make them feel at home?

Did he increase the people's loads, And liberty forbid? No, he dug in and built good roads— That's what old Caesar did.

Did Caesar put the iron heel Upon the foeman's breast Or did he try to make them feel That Roman's rule was best? What did he do to make them glad He came their lands amid? He built good roads in place of bad— That's what old Caesar did.

He built good roads from hill to hill, Good roads from vale to vale; He ran a good road movement Till old Rome got all the kale. He told the folks to buy at home, Build roads their ruts to rid, Until all roads led up to Rome— That's what old Caesar did.

If any town would make itself The center of the map, Where folks will come and settle down And live in plenty's lap; If any town its own abodes Of poverty would rid, Let it go out and build good roads— Just like old Caesar did. —Ohio Motorist.

The Psychology of Practice.

The question of short versus long periods of practice in training the human muscles for any particular kind of work is obviously one having far-reaching application. Some interesting experiments on this subject have been carried out by Dr. K. S. Lastley of Johns Hopkins university. Acquisition of skill in archery was selected as the subject of observation. Twenty untrained persons were divided into three groups. One group shot five arrows with the English longbow per day; another twenty shots per day and the third forty shots. The result showed conclusively that the group shooting only five times a day improved in accuracy with less expenditure of time in practice than was required by either of the other groups for the same amount of improvement. A report on the experiments says: "The relatively greater efficiency of short periods of practice continuing for many days is in accordance with the results of the study of animals and of speech habits in man and indicates that in training muscular feats, in both animals and men, the length of practice periods required is usually too great for maximum efficiency."—Philadelphia Record.

Climate Variety in Chile.

Chile has a coast line of 2,000 miles and the breadth of the country varies from only 100 to 250 miles. The crest of the Andes marks the eastern boundary and the Pacific ocean the western. The coast chain and the principal cordillera of the Andes traverse the country longitudinally. Between them lies the central valley, the great agricultural section of the country. In the north are the arid deserts which contain the nitrate. In the south is the Chilios archipelago and the mainland where the rains are frequent and constant. The long stretch of coast and the variations due to the mountain chains afford every variety of climate, but the greater section of the country may be said to have a temperate climate. The mineral resources are the natural wealth which furnish the major part of the purchasing power.—New York Sun.

A Glimpse of "Central" Behind the Scenes

HAVE YOU ever visited a telephone central office? Have you any idea what goes on behind the scenes during those few seconds between the lifting of the receiver and the answering voice of your friend or business acquaintance?

A trip through a telephone exchange is a most interesting experience. Our latch string is always out and we welcome the opportunity to show our patrons how their telephone calls are handled.

There is a mutual advantage in a visit to one of our central offices. It makes for better understanding between us. The knowledge you gain of how to use the telephone and of our methods of operation should make the telephone more valuable to you and should aid us in our efforts to furnish you with the best telephone service of which science is capable.
