The Old Year Out and the New Year In

By EDITH V. ROSS

The celebration of New Year's day in New York has necessarily changed with the people who celebrate it. It was transplanted to New Amsterdam from Holland when a few houses clustered about the fort and every person in the village knew every other person. That was a fit community for making calls. When the people of New York had grown from hundreds to millions the custom broke down of its own

How far back dates the custom of celing the old year out and the new year in is not known. Certain It is that one night in New Amsterdam-Dec. 31-Hendrick, the watch, after calling the hour "Twelve o'clock and all's well," turned to walk to the next corner to repeat the announcement, when he saw the house of Killian van Gansback in a blaze of illumination from fully a dozen wax candles. Hammering with the great iron knocker, the upper half of the door was opened, and he saw a number of Dutch girls in many petticoats and young men in many pairs of breeches raising pewter mugs to drink in Holland gin to St. Nicholas, the patron saint of the town, "May be grant us a prosperous

"What means this invasion of the night when all good citizens should be sound asleep in bed?" he cried. "Dis perse!

The moment it was noticed that the intruder upon the festivities was the watch every light was blown out and there was a scattering of the revelers. Bolts were shot, and in a few minutes the rooms on the ground floor were locked and the great front door was barred.

At that time Katrina Van Gansback was at a marriageable age, and her father had decided to wed her to old Dedrick Beekman, more than twice as old as she. Her mother was dead, and she had been brought up under the care of her aunt, Anneke Ten Eyck, a spinster of fifty. During the festivities on that eventful night the aunt drew Beekman into a side room for the purpose of arranging the settlement be was to make upon her niece and to appoint a day for the wedding.

Katrina was not only opposed to marrying old Beekman, but had a lover in young Wouter Ten Broeck, and the young couple were at their wits' end to find a way to defeat Anneke Ten Eyek's plan for marrying Katrina to Beekman. During the evening of the old-new year conviviality Katrina stood at the door listening to the arrangements that were being made to dispose of her. The moment the company were gone and the lights were put out she turned the key on her aunt and Beekman and led ber father, who was feeble, up to his room and

A loud knocking came from below, but as the only persons in except the couple locked in below, were Katrina and her father, and the latter was deaf as the stone steps in front of the house, their ability to get out depended solely on Katrina. When she had seen ber father in bed and well covered, especially about the ears, she went out, closing the door behind her, and descended to the room where the prisoners were still hammering to

"Who's there?" asked the minx, pretending ignorance.

"Your Aunt Anneke. Let me out at once.

"Any one else?" "Yes; Meinheer Beekman is in here with me."

"Oh, auntie, what a talk this will cnuse!" "No scandal at all unless you blab."

"My keeping the secret will do no good. You and Meinheer Beekman must be married."

"Nonsense! There's no need of the matter getting out.' "I don't want to marry Melnheer

Beekman, and I do want to marry Wouter Ten Brock."

There was no reply to this for some time. Evidently the parties within Frances the young son of Mr. and were consulting as to what it was best to do. Whether the woman refused to marry the man or the man refused to marry the woman was never known. At any rate, after a conference the aunt returned to the attack, or, rather, persuasion, telling her niece of the advantages she would enjoy as the wife of Meinbeer Beekman, who was the largest dealer in pelts in New Amster-

> But Katrina was not to be persuaded, and her aunt was at last obliged to consent to her terms. No written pledge was required, for Katrina needed only to tell the story to set the tongues of the town wagging about her aunt and Meinheer Beekman.

As soon as an agreement was reached Katrina unlocked the door, and Meinheer Beekman, taking down the bars to the front door, stole away in the darkness. The next day the bethe darkness. The next day the be-trothal of Katrina and Wouter Ten I Am Paying More for Brock was announced.

Katrina kept the secret till after her aunt had been dead some years, then told it to her daughter, who was about it down, and it is preserved in the archives of the family to this very

However, the story does not prove that the Dutchmen of New Amsterdam were in the habit of seeing the old year out and the new year in, else the watch would not have broken up the

Serving the Public Well

We believe that the public welfare is best served by our constantly making extensions and improvements to our existing property to meet the continuing requirements of the public for additional service

In order to get new money for extensions, it is essential that we pay fair dividends. No man will put his money in an enterprise unless he is reasonably sure that it will be safe and that fair dividends will be paid promptly.

We have absolutely no "watered stock." A dollar has been invested for every dollar's worth of securities issued. This has been proved beyond all doubt by hundreds of investigations by commissions and governing bodies.

In order that we may keep the investment of our security holders safe and our service to the public dependable and continuous, we maintain a sufficient reserve to rebuild or replace our property when it is destroyed by fires or storms, or is worn out or becomes obsolete.

A consistent adherence to this policy has enabled us to give you the best, the most comprehensive and the cheapest telephone service in the world.
