THE BEST TEST

is the Test of Time.

Years ago this North Platte resident told of good results from using Doan's Kidney Pills. Now August Ackerman, retired farmer, of 620 east Fourth street, confirms the former statement—says there has been no return of the trouble. Can North Platte people ask for more convincing testimony?

Mr. Ackerman says: "I used Doan's Kidney Pills for backache and kidney trouble and they soon rid me of the pain and aches. I believe they are the best kidney medicine to be had. It has been over three years now since I used Doan's Kidney Pills and my health has been splendid, not a symptom of kidney trouble bothering me." (Statement given August 1, 1910).

On June 2, 1916, Mr. Ackerman said: "Kidney trouble of which Doan's Kidney Pills cured me has shown no signs of returning. I certainly recommend them highly for having permanently rid me of the suffering I endured several years ago."

Its Backbone is a Spring.

The snapping bug has a spring in his back like a knife. When not in use as a spring it serves him as a backbone, so you see he is a believer in scientific efficiency and makes one part of his machinery do the work of two.

His spring backbone, or backbone spring, if you prefer, gives him power to jump, which in turn gives him his name. Nature probably gave him the spring to help him get on his feet when he's on his back. You've noticed how helpless some insects are when you lay them on their backs. Not this one, however. He slips his backbone out of its groove and then slips it back again suddenly. The spring pops him up in the air; he turns a somersault and drops right side up. Spring backbones are common in several other beetles, remarks the Philadelphia North American. The beetle of the postiferous wireworm, which destroys the farmer's crops, has a spring in his back. Other members of the family make their homes in trees or decayed wood.

Measuring a Rainfall. The depth of the sheet of water that would lie on level ground if none of the water were lost by evaporation or soaking into the soil represents the amount of rainfall of a given storm and is measured by a rain gauge. The standard rain gauge of the weather bureau consists of a funnel shaped receiver eight inches in diameter at the top, surmounted by a cylinder of one and one-half inches in height and eight inches in diameter. The funnel is placed in a cylindrical reservoir, 2.53 inches in diameter and twenty inches in height. The area of the cross section of the reservoir is to that of the receiver as one to ten, or one inch of rain falling in the receiver corresponds with ten inches of water in the gauge, being magnified ten times for the convenience and accuracy of measurement.

Guarding the Bank of England. The Bank of England is quite the best guarded institution in the world. No burglar or bank thief has ever succeeded in making it part with a penny. The great outer doors are so finely balanced that a clerk can, by pressing a knob under his desk, instantly shut them in the face of any one making a dash for the street. They cannot be opened except by special machinery.

In recesses near the doors are hidden four guardians, who, without being seen themselves, watch all visitors through mirrors.

Special and costly precautions are taken to guard the bullion department, where the gold is stored. It has been stated that the whole department is submerged every night in several feet of water by machinery. The same machinery would be also set in action automatically if at any time during the day the place were tampered with.—London Globe.

Pepps at a Banquet.

People probably eat more judiciously today than they did when Samuel Pepps wrote the following account of his holiday menu:

"We had a fricassee of rabbits and chickens, a leg of mutton, boiled; carps in a dish, a great dish of a side of lamb, a dish of roasted pigeons, a dish of four lobsters, three tarts, a lamprey pie—a most rare pie—a dish of anchovies, good wine of several sorts and all things mighty noble, to my great content."

The striking thing about this feast, which was probably a typical one of its day (1663), is that it is composed almost entirely of meat and fish, relieved only by pastry and wine. If there were any vegetables in it Pepps did not consider it necessary to mention them, and it is possible that there were none. Potatoes were hardly known in England at that time, and many other vegetables now considered necessities were either not known or were rarely used.—San Francisco Bulletin.

Metchnikoff's Dream.

Dr. Elle Metchnikoff, the great Russian medical scientist, who for many years made his home in Paris, was the son of an officer of the Russian guard. He had the figure of a moujik, an abundant, uncultivated beard, long hair and big, dreamy eyes. This savant had much of the simplicity of the visionary. Possessed by the problems of disease and sorrow, he was convinced that all would be for the best if man could recover the primitive purity of his organs. In this paradise which he would restore and that science might realize he held that man should never suffer and that at the end of approximately 100 years he would die with the same ease that one falls asleep in the evening. In the world that Dr. Metchnikoff has left he had explained that the body was a very imperfect machine and that there were 105 organs or remains of organs that were superfluous, useless and even dangerous.—Cri de Paris.

A Better Trade.

"I understand young Briedles is about to marry the daughter of old Bonds, the millionaire?"

"Yes, so I am told."

"Will he give up the law business?"

"Yes. He will give up the law business and go into the son-in-law business."
