BACON TELLS OF LIFE ON A FRENCH ROAD.

Charley Bacon, who was formerly a brakeman out of this terminal and went overseas with an engineering corps, in a letter to W. J. Landgraf, says in part: "This is a great life if you don't weaken; but if you weaken it is hell. I am right at the front where all the big excitement is going on and have a fine job as an engineer on a trench railroad, and believe me you see all the big stuff pulled off. The engine looks more like an automobile than a locomotive, but she travels just the same.

On this job they figure the length of a man's life at forty-five minutes, but already I have out lived that period by several days, but of course I don't know how soon I may get mine. However, I am hoping that the shell-hole is to get me, if I am to be gotten, has not yet been made by the boches.

The first few days I was on the job I nearly shook my shoes off, and some of the boys said I had joined the suicide bunch, but I have become accustomed to bursting shells and they don't have so much effect on me. However, I have had a good many narrow escapes when bursting shells flew all around me. Once I was within 300 yards of sixty Japs who were killed by a bomb.

I have also seen many exciting airplane fights. This life is great if a man can get safely by, and his experience will be well worth recalling in future years."

THE YANKS START OFFENSIVE ON REGISTRATION DAY.

The long-heralded offensive in France began yesterday. It was started in the morning on the western edge of the Woivre plain and was evidently intended to break the grip of the Germans on the Meuse river, south of Verdun, and to open the way for attacks against the great German fortresses of Metz and Strasbourg. With the opening of the American drive allied offensive operations now extend over practically all the western front from the North sea to the Swiss frontier.

For some time the Americans have been concentrating heavy forces on a certain sector of the American front and the developments indicated they were being massed on the Woivre plain. Two dominating facts stand out: 1. That the American offensive was launched on registration day in America. 2. That Secretary of War Baker has just reached the fighting front. Up to seven o'clock last evening American troops on the Lorraine front had captured the towns of Thiaucourt, Pannes and Nousard. North of St. Mihiel, General Pershing's forces have captured Combres. They are reported to have reached the western outskirts of Donmartin in Montagne. French troops co-operating with the Americans in their drive on the St. Mihiel salient have reached the western outskirts of St. Mihiel. Thiaucourt was captured early in the drive. From that town the battle line runs a little to the south of Boillonville, then to Pannes and Nonsard, which were captured, to Bois de Gargantua and north of Montsec.
