What to send "the boy" overseas is a conundrum to a good many North Platte mothers. One lady says that as socks, wristlets, and wearing apparel of such nature can be purchased overseas as cheaply as here, that it seems out of place to send them. This lady suggests that hard candy, salted almonds and other confections would probably be appreciated more by the boys than anything else.

NORTH PLATTE CELEBRATES SIGNING OF THE ARMISTICE.

No celebration ever held in North Platte compared in exuberance and sincerity with that which marked the signing of the armistice promulgated by the allies to the Germans, and which celebration began shortly before four yesterday morning and continued in a more or less spirited manner until twelve o'clock last night. The bulletin announcing that the armistice had been signed reached North Platte at 2:30 a. m., but it was not until a few minutes before four o'clock that Arthur Hoagland loaded up forty pounds of dynamite in a car, took it to the city park and exploded it. This was the first intimation North Platte had of the receipt of the glad-some news. Following these explosions the valves on the whistles at the round house, the shops, the water plant, and on many locomotives in the yards were opened, and for fully a half our there was a perfect bedlam. Roused from slumber by these far reaching sounds, the people hastily dressed and came down town on foot and in cars and at 4:15 several hundred people had assembled at the corner of Front and Dewey, and each succeeding minute augmented the crowd by scores. The drum corps and the band soon made their appearance, a gang of hustlers secured many boxes and crates for a bon-fire which was started and then a continuous parading of the streets and around the bon-fire continued until nine o'clock amid drum corps and band music, singing, cheering and the firing of guns by the Home Guards. In thirty minutes following the blowing of the whistles, thousands of people were on the streets and a general hurrah of a time was held by all.

Early in the morning it was announced that Mayor Waltemath had proclaimed the day a public holiday and shortly thereafter every business house was placarded with a sign which read: "Closed tight, the Kaiser has gone to hell."

During the day hundreds of people from the country came in, and thru-out the afternoon Dewey street was crowded. At two o'clock another parade started in which the band, drum corps, members of the Red Cross and Canteen workers and scores of automobiles took part.

The jollification was continued last evening with parades, bon-fires and music by the band. A country resident who spent yesterday with us remarked that he never had seen North Platte put quite so much pep into a celebration.

PRESIDENT WILSON CANCELS OUTSTANDING DRAFT CALLS.

President Wilson yesterday ordered the cancellation of all outstanding draft calls. This stops the movement of all draftees, and therefore the ninety-three Lincoln county men who were called to leave Friday of this week will not need to go. This action of the president was anticipated following the signing of the armistice. That no more men are needed on the battle field, and that those now there will need no more fighting is joyful news to everyone.
