ADDITIONAL WORD AS TO THE DEATH OF NOEL C. DONEGAN

In attempting to find out all the facts in regard to his brother Noel's death, Cyril Donegan in service overseas wrote to the commanding officer of Noel's company, and in reply received the following:

"Private Noel C. Donegan was wounded at Montfaucon, France, October 13, 1918, by high explosive shell fire while this company was marching to the front line to partake in the Argonne offensive. He was struck in the leg and the wound dressed by the regimental surgeon. He was put in the ambulance and was evacuated to a hospital. From that date until the reception of your letter yesterday no word was received from him.

"Your brother was assigned to this company the latter part of November, 1917, and was with the organization continually since that time. He took an active part in the St. Die sector during the month of August last year and also in the St. Mihiel offensive which began September 12, 1918. During all the while he was with this command his work was always satisfactory and his character excellent. Although it may be hard for his mother to learn of his death, she might well be proud to be the mother of this noble young man who gave his life freely for his country and asked nothing in return."

Appended to this letter is a note from the quartermaster's department stating that Noel had died November 16th and had been buried in the American cemetery at Fleury-sur-Aire, Meuse, France, which is under the care and control of the United States government.

"SECRET STRINGS" IS NEW METRO OFFERING

Olive Tell Stars in Big Broadway Success at the Sun Theatre

"Secret Strings," which is the title of the latest Metro play, which will be shown at the Sun Theatre Wednesday in which the beautiful star, Olive Tell, is seen, was adapted for the screen from the successful Broadway production of the same name from the pen of Kate Jordan.

This play deals with the dramatic events which follow when a girl of unusual beauty and charm finds the man she has married is a smooth and unprincipled crook who intends to use her attractions to further his own ends. She leaves him but later comes into his life and in the means of preventing a gigantic jewel robbery which he has planned with his partner in crime. Love comes into her life again, this time however, with a man worthy of her and the romance ends in happiness. The play is one which is calculated to excite and retain interest—the situations are unusual and work rapidly to a tremendous and dramatic climax in which the star is seen to wonderful advantage.

The entire production is admirably acted and the notable cast includes such names as William J. Kelly, who plays the leading male role, Hugh Thompson, John Daly Murphy, Marie Whitwright, Bert Tichey, Barbara Winthrop, Hugh Jeffrey, John A. Sully and Edward Lawrence. The direction was the work of John Ince under the personal supervision of Maxwell Karger.

"The Eyes of the World"

When Harold Bell Wright began work on "The Eyes of the World" he was a resident of Redlands, Cal. This story, which has had a sale of nearly 2,000,000 copies, (which means, according to the publisher's accepted ratio of five readers to each sale, about 10,000,000 readers), has been put into elaborate cinema form by the Clune Company and is to be seen at the Keith Theatre on March 11 and 12.

An interesting incident in connection with this fact was related recently by Mr. Wright when the work of translating the book into motion pictures was under way. Much of its work was done in Redlands, for it is the common belief that the author put into the story people whose prototypes he observed while pastor of a church there.

The author's indictment of "society" did not refer specifically to Redlands, but applied equally well to any other community where wrongful social tendencies are in evidence—and that means practically every good-sized American community nowadays.

So it seems fair to say, the scene of many of the incidents of the story, is not a thinly disguised pseudonym for Redlands, but only happens to be the name that sprang into the mind of Mr. Wright for the purpose of his tale of fiction.
