A year or more ago the government called upon the farmers to "dig in" and raise all the hogs they possibly could; that the country was threatened with a shortage of pork, and our allies across the water would need all that could be grown. The farmer "hopped to it" and his yards are now filled with fat porkers ready for the market. But now the packers declare the market is glutted with fat hogs, and as a result hogs can only be sent to market when permission is given, or only as fast as the packers can take care of them. But the price fixed by the government for prime fat hogs, $17.50 remain the same.—Exchange.
