Refuse to Accept Resignation.

W. B. Salisbury tendered his resignation as street commissioner to the city council Tuesday evening, but that body declined to accept it. Instead, the salary of the commissioner was increased with the object of having Salisbury stay on the job. Salisbury stated that he presented his resignation not because of the salary paid, but to escape "grief." Ordinances relating to the streets were being violated every day and when he attempted to enforce them the mayor and council failed to stand back of him. That's why he had resigned. He was assured that if he continued as commissioner he would be supported in the enforcement of ordinances, and upon this assurance he withdrew his resignation. Salisbury stated yesterday that he had the names of twelve who had violated ordinances and that he would file complaint against them. In enforcing the ordinances, Salisbury says all offenders will look alike to him.

"Daddy Long Legs."

Don't s'pose there's one of you who hasn't read that fascinating story of Jean Webster's, which ran in the Ladies' Home Journal and then appeared in book form, and was then acted on the legitimate stage.
