Miss Frater was one of a group of twenty-four nurses being transferred from the base hospital at Camp Dodge to the Letterman army general hospital at the Presidio. The nurses were accompanied by Miss Louler, the chief nurse at the Letterman, who had been in Chicago attending a conference of the heads of the army nursing corps.

Use Bank Drafts When Sending Money

Safety first—if you use bank drafts in sending money by mail.

They are most acceptable anywhere and any bank will cash them for you. They cost less than Express or Postoffice Money Orders, and if lost, payment can be stopped at once without loss to you.

Successful business men use this method.

From the Dead

By OTILLIA FRANCES PFEIFFER

(Copyright, 1919, by the Western Newspaper Union.)

He had made the mistake of his life, but was facing it manfully. Estranged from his family, stubborn pride held him in continued alienation. Wedded to a mere doll of a woman, who had become a hopeless invalid, Wilfred Marsh closed every past chapter of his life and devoted dreary hours to her care, and worked like a slave to provide her with luxuries she demanded as wittlessly as though he had a royal fortune.

He had married under an impulse urged on by loneliness and had accepted a position on a river steamer as clerk, because nothing better had come along. He was gone four days a week on his trips, the other three he was at her side, ministering to her illness and her whims. He tried to hide from himself that he had ceased to love her, but the conviction caused him to make even greater sacrifices to emphasize his loyalty.

Finally Adela became so hopeless an invalid that it was necessary to provide her with a nurse. There came in answer to an advertisement a young woman, whose very loveliness was accentuated by eyes that told of sadness and firmly compressed lips that indicated that her path in life had not been a flowery one.

"It will not be the pleasantest of homes for you, and your cares will be heavy," Marsh told her frankly.

"I have had neither home nor friends for five years," answered Blanche Tyson smilelessly. "I will do my duty."

"She kept her word. During two months her efforts to please and add to the comfort of the invalid were incessant. She lifted many a burden from the oppressed shoulders of her employer, and her presence in the house calmed and encouraged him the few brief days of the week he remained at home. Adela Marsh sank rapidly. The doctor had told Miss Tyson that the end might come at any time. It was dawning when terrible news came to the cheerless home. The river steamer had collided with another craft one dark night, the lives of fifty persons were sacrificed and listed among the dead and missing was Wilfred Marsh.

Blanche did not tell Adela of her widowhood, under instruction from the attendant physician.

The end came within the same week. Blanche saw to all funeral and other arrangements. The sale of the furniture in the house barely covered expenses. Alone in the stricken home, gathering up its belongings for sale, Blanche came across some letters. One she read to learn of the past of Wilfred Marsh. It was from his mother, beseeching him to return home. Even if he had married, she implored him to bring his wife with him—loving, forgiving hearts were ready to welcome both. The next day she came across the marriage certificate of Marsh and Adela Bortell. She passed a troubled night. Wealth—home—mother—these seemed to cry out to her to seek repayment for the long, lonely years of the past. Who would ever know?

Six months to a day after the departure of Blanche the man the world had supposed to be dead appeared at the dismantled home. Wilfred Marsh had escaped from the river disaster by being picked up on a piece of wreckage, badly injured and insensible. He had not been recognized and had lain in a hospital, practically devoid of memory and reason. Pale, attenuated, he had come back to his former home to find it tenantless. It would take many further months to recuperate. His soul longed for home and his own people. He had barely enough to pay his fare back to his native town. It was just at dusk that he stood at the threshold of the home of his happy childhood. He quivered with fear as he reflected that his father or mother, or both, might have died during his absence.

But no! With a joyous cry his aged mother folded him in her eager arms, welcoming him as one restored from the grave, while his father embraced him, weeping with compassion and delight.

"Oh, father! call Adela, quick! quick!" cried his mother. "We gave you up as dead, and oh, Wilfred! the angel who came to bring tender love into our lives, your wife—"

"My wife!" repeated Wilfred.

"Yes. She came to us directly after it was supposed you had perished in the river accident. She has been our solace—our comfort. Adela."

Blanche Tyson, never knowing why she had been summoned, entered the room, stared bewilderedly at Wilfred, and fell to a chair in a swoon. Father and mother rushed for restoratives. Blanche opened her eyes.

"Forgive!" she whispered brokenly. "I was hungry and thirsting for love, and they have given me their hearts' store. Oh! must I go back to the drear, chill old life!"

"You brave woman!" he whispered, "true as steel to my dead wife, an angel in the household here. If I am worthy your love give it also to me. Hush! they are coming."

Wilfred Marsh made an excuse to meet a friend and Blanche went with him. Two hours and a discreet clergyman sufficed to cement the marriage tie, and the fond mother and father, calling Blanche "Adela" to the end, never knew the secret of her imposture which had brought lasting happiness to all.

VIOLA DANA FINDS RACE HORSE EASY TO MANAGE

The daring scene in "Satan Junior," in which Viola Dana is seen on a runaway horse, proves to be one of reality.

All went well until a passing army truck startled the nervous animal, who then dashed off in flight. The scene was caught by the camera and provided a splendid bit of realism for the picture.

It was not until her return that Miss Dana found that she had been riding a horse who is well known on all race tracks of the country and who was loaned for her special use by the owner. See it at the Sun Friday, July 4th.

Leypoldt & Pennington Win Case
W. V. Hoagland returned Wednesday from Omaha where for a week he had been conducting a case in court. A man up in the Elkhorn valley had agreed to sell Leypoldt & Pennington, of this city, a certain quantity of hay at an agreed price. Hay ascended in price after the agreement and the fellow refused to deliver the hay. Leypoldt & Pennington brought suit for damages and were awarded a judgment of eighty-one hundred dollars.

Aged Man Hangs Himself

John Strollberg, of Kearney, aged eighty-two, father of Frank Strollberg, who lives near Birdwood siding, hanged himself in the city jail at Kearney Sunday night. His body was found by the jail keeper when the latter proceeded to enter the cell with breakfast. Strollberg had looped his suspenders about his neck tying one end to the cell door bars and then slowly strangling to death. His feet touched the ground. Apparently after death set in the suspenders gave way, the body being found on the cell floor. Strollberg was arrested late Sunday on complaint filed by a number of women residing in his neighborhood and was to have a hearing Monday morning. He was a well to do retired farmer.

Grade Crossing Accidents

The State Journal has compiled a list showing that for the six months ending June 30th twenty-three people were killed and twenty injured while crossing railroad grade crossings in automobiles. The Journal adds that the list is not complete as those recorded were sent in as news items, and undoubtedly some accidents occurred that were not sent in to the paper. These accidents were largely, if not altogether, due to the carelessness of the drivers.

Four or five years ago our friend Engineer Bob Douglas had introduced in the legislature a bill requiring drivers of autos to stop before passing over a grade crossing, but the overly wise legislators regarded the bill as sort of a joke. Had the bill become a law and strictly observed by auto drivers during the period since, not less than 250 lives would have been saved, and an equal number of injuries averted.

New Plan for Homes

Owing to the surface water conditions and considerable property damage to the public in this city and surrounding country are subject to contend with when such conditions exist after heavy rains as recently happened during the last heavy rain fall, it is my desire to acquaint the public with my idea of planning a house that would overcome the inconveniences that are experienced when this surface water occurs. For this purpose I have planned a residence building that will not only overcome this condition, but at the same time can be planned and designed to be modern in every way and to give all the comforts that are desired in a home. This plan is entirely new and different from the ordinary method of house planning. Those who are interested in building homes at this time should see Victor F. Beck, architect. For further information in regard to the above mentioned plans a preliminary drawing of this plan can be seen in the window of the Newton News and Stationery Store, North Platte, Nebraska.

In Need of Harvest Hands

One thousand harvest hands are needed by farmers of Nebraska to help take care of the monster wheat crop now ready for cutting, according to information given out by the state labor bureau at Lincoln. The wheat yield is reported to be the largest in years, some of the fields going from 40 to 70 bushels to the acre. The crop is ripening fast and many farmers are having trouble in securing help enough to take care of the grain. Wages offered range from 50 to 65 cents an hour, with board.

Public Library Notes

The library will be closed July 4th. Over 500 more books were given out during the month of June, 1919, than in June, 1918. The following persons were appointed by the city council as members of the library board: Miss Annie Kramp, Mrs. Joseph Roddy, Judge Hoagland, Ed. Davis and T. C. Patterson. The board will meet for organization Monday, July 7th.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Foster, former North Platte residents, arrived from Denver this morning and will visit friends for several days.

Old Hickory Furniture For Porch Or Lawn

Disappointment invariably follows the purchase of cheaply made, poorly constructed Porch or Lawn Furniture.

Furniture designed to withstand weather exposure must necessarily be carefully and sturdily built of woods especially suited to the purpose.

Our "Old Hickory" Furniture embodies the qualities best adapted to the rigorous service which porch and lawn furniture must undergo.

Every piece is carefully made of selected, thoroughly seasoned "Old Hickory," and will render many years of absolutely satisfactory service.

Our assortment includes Tables, Chairs, Rockers, Ferneries, Settees, etc., and the prices are very moderate.

Reed and Fiber Furniture—A Splendid Display—Our wonderful display of Reed and Fiber Furniture for the breakfast room, sun parlor and living room has caused no end of favorable comment.

Those who have seen it have been fairly amazed at the volume and variety of the selection, and the wealth of pleasing color combinations from which to choose.
