HAS STIRRED UP ANTIQUARIES

Englishman Believes He Has Discovered the Site of Edward the Confessor's Palace.

In Windsor's great park the discovery has been made of what appears to be the site of Edward the Confessor's palace. The discoverer, Capt. Vaughan Williams, had his attention drawn to two moats where rabbits had been burrowing, and here he unearthed some tiles like Norman bricks. He next came upon flints, sandstone and tiles, and he is continuing the search. In the days of Queen Victoria a tower with walls 12 feet thick was pulled down which was said by archeologists to have been built by Edward the Confessor. The secretary of the Berkshire Archeological society in connection with Captain Williams' find, states that there was before the foundation of Windsor castle a palace in Windsor forest where many notable events happened. This palace had a tower as a means of defense. In a Harlequin MS. an illumination occurs which represents a palace where a lady is seen giving alms and earning for herself the title of "loaf-giver". The manor of Old Windsor belonged to the Saxons, and Edward the Confessor certainly held court there. Edward being prevented by his nobles from going to Rome caused Westminster to be built with the money which he would have spent on his journey. He then gave Old Windsor to the monks, but the gift was revoked by William the Conqueror, who found Windsor convenient for his hunts in the forests.

CITY MAY HAVE BIG FUTURE

Dakar, in South Africa, Promises to Develop into Something Like Another Liverpool.

The city of Dakar in South Africa, less than half a century ago in a really primitive condition, with naked children running around the streets and mothers working with babies strapped upon their backs, has suddenly come into prominence as the prospective "Liverpool" of Africa. In the keen competition that is expected between America and Europe for trade in South Africa, Dakar, it is believed, will have an important role to play. The French are today making extensive improvements at Dakar. They have spent much money in enlarging the dry dock and making the harbor deeper as well as increasing the facilities for transferring cargo from boat to train. The Dakar of today is a thriving town of about 25,000 people, with wide well-laid-out streets, a large technical school, hospitals and workshops. There are, however, a great majority of natives, being in fact, only about 3,500 Frenchmen. These natives have been said by some to have formerly been the masters of the Mediterranean. They are wonderful fighters and it was only with great difficulty that in 1862, Gen. Faldherbe, the French governor, was able to overcome them. Thus he paved the way for the founding of Dakar. We may know a great deal more about it later.

Navy's Great Airship Hangar.

The navy is purchasing its first rigid airship in England at a cost of $2,500,000. To house it a huge hangar is to be erected at Lakehurst, N. J., which will be 800 feet long, 295 feet wide, and will have a clear inside height of 174 feet, while the total height from the ground to the peak of the roof will be over 200 feet. The steel framework will be over 6,000 tons. Two elevators and several stairways will lead to the roof. The many shops necessary for the maintenance of the airships will be built in between the great arched trusses that support the roof. Three railroad tracks will run the entire length of the building. The hangar will be large enough to hold one ship of 10,000,000 cubic feet capacity, and a smaller one at each side, or two 5,000,000 cubic feet ships side by side.—Scientific American.

Be Master of Yourself.

To be able to keep cool when all the world goes mad shows mental grasp and genuine bigness. This grows with the years. It becomes a part of the nature. Newly dubbed aristocrats and the victims of sudden wealth usually betray their plebeian origin by their cultivated show of authority. Where the blood tells it rises with might to occasions, but seldom allows itself to get ruffled without occasion. And what a spectacle one can make of himself by getting all steamed about nothing or losing his temper on some little thing that approximates the zero mark. The really big character is slow to anger and irritates little things by his superior calm control. At the same time the exhibition of mastery challenges the secret admiration of all.

Taken Up.

ALPHA OLSON.

The Crow's Nest By FREDERICK CLARK (Copyright, 1919 by the Western Newspaper Union.)

John Burt, a lonely man, except for the company of an aged mother, came down the spiral staircase at the top story of the city hall and started for home. As he took one elevator down, another reached the top floor and a young woman left it. She was far more lonely than he. Wretchedness showed in her face and her eyes roved about her like those of a hunted being seeking a refuge.

She was Lucy Newton, and ever since she could remember until recently she had lived in a lonely old house in a dead country town, a drudge to a cross grained exacting relative. When the latter had died Lucy had come to the city. For days she had walked the streets, seeking work but finding none. Footsore, weary, hungry, despairing, she had been told to present her case to the free employment bureau at the city hall, to find the offices closed. It was chill outside and the building was a warm welcome shelter.

"I must rest for a little time," she murmured brokenly, came to the spiral staircase, noticed a landing half way up, sat down on its broad surface, drooped utterly exhausted, and was soon fast asleep.

"Why! What is this?" came to her confused hearing twelve hours later, and she sat up and blinked at the light of a new morning. John Burt, a small parcel under his arm, stared down strangely at the haggard, frightened refugee.

"I—I was very tired," stammered Lucy. "I had no place to go. It was warm here—I meant no harm."

"You have done none," Burt quickly answered her in the kindest of tones. "Wait until I unlock the door," and he stepped past her. "Come in and rest a bit."

Lucy stared vaguely. Her host had opened the door of a queer turret shaped room, the entire upper half of which was framed in glass. Over a hundred feet below was the street. Afar in every direction the city spread out. She could not surmise the object or utility of this narrow apartment.

"This is the Crow's Nest, as it is called," explained Burt, "and I am its keeper, employed by the city to note smoke violations, watch, specify and report the same. There is a comfortable arm chair."

Burt went over to a bench on which was a small oil stove. He lit it and took down a coffee pot from a shelf, opened the parcel he had carried and as his guest sat staring dreamily from the lofty eerie, placed on a stand at her elbow a steaming cup of coffee and his neodynd lunch.

He left his guest to herself as he set about his usual duties. With a telescope he swung the circle of his tower room. When he noted some factory chimney pouring out smoke he would consult a chart, a clock, and finally write upon a tab sheet records as: "Brown and Company, plant smoked for seventeen minutes. Apparently use low grade fuel, with no smoke consumer." Glancing toward the girl he noted that she had fallen asleep in her chair. She awoke about noon, all embarrassment over a sense of intrusion upon the time and attention of a perfect stranger. She arose, words of gratitude upon her lips, and tears came, she broke down utterly, and then, as Burt gently questioned her, all the sadder story of her lonely life came out.

"Poor child!" he commented, and his hand rested like benison upon her bowed head. "You indeed need a friend, and I know where to find you one. I have an old mother who will be glad as myself to shelter you as a welcome visitor, until you are more able to cope with a cold, heartless world."

The aged mother of John Burt welcomed Lucy Newton as only a kind-hearted woman could do. It was well that Lucy had fallen into such friendly hands, for she had an attack of fever lasting for over two weeks. One evening during her convalescence she heard mother and son discussing their affairs.

"Yes, I feel I shall have to give up my position," Burt was saying. "The doctor directs that I must rest my eyes completely for six months. It has got so that I cannot locate the smoke, not even with the telescope."

A wave of infinite love swept over the mind of Lucy as she realized how much she owed to these good kind people. She gazed into the adjoining room and approached the grave-faced Burt and his anxious mother.

"Oh, Mr. Burt!" she pleaded, "let me be your eyes until you are all well again—let me labor for you day and night, if it is necessary, to show you how my soul prizes your helpfulness, your kindness, and that of your mother for a homeless, friendless orphan girl!"

Lucy was duly installed in the Crow's Nest, directed by Burt, but quickly becoming expert in her task. It was like a new dream-life to the poor wail—the glory of fur vision over the world below, the peace of those beautiful evenings in the little home. She had never had a love experience until now. Burt had long since settled down into the conviction that he was destined to remain a bachelor. What could come about, save that these two so strangely drifted together should unite their longing souls in a mutual love so sweet, so precious, that life became to them a real paradise!
