

HER AUNT'S WILL

By JACK LAWTON.

(Copyright, 1919, Western Newspaper Union.)

Aunt Trimble leaned back in her chair and regarded her niece wrathfully.

"If you persist in your intention to marry this nobody," she said, "I will cut you out of my will and leave the money to charity. Was it to marry a poor clerk that I gave you education and accomplishments of the best?"

"Harry is not a nobody," Rhoda indignantly retorted, "he is a good man and true. And he will not always be a clerk. His chosen business is one which promises steady advancement. But if it didn't," the girl added vehemently, "I'd marry him just the same."

"No doubt," muttered Aunt Trimble scornfully, "this Harry has not used his dark romantic eyes in vain. But if he were the man you think him to be, he would never accept the sacrifice you are making."

"Sacrifice!" cried the girl, the blue eyes gleaming. "Do you compare love for him with an old house no matter how grand and imposing? Why, I'd be happier in two rooms with my Harry, than mistress of all this estate."

"You shall have your wish then, ungrateful girl," the Aunt said bitterly; impulsively she tapped a bell at her side.

"Get Mr. Timmons, my lawyer on the phone," she commanded the maid who answered. "Tell him my business is immediately important. I wish to change my will."

A man's figure came quickly through the hall.

"I could not help hearing," said a grave voice, "what has just been said. Your voices carried, as I came up."

The young man turned a white face upon the girl, his eyes were tragic. "And Rhoda," he went on, "your aunt is right about my selfishness in allowing you to make this sacrifice. I can't take you this way dear; I'm but a poor clerk after all, and I have not the courage to face those two rooms of which you spoke, for your home. After all the luxury of your bringing up, in your heart, you would soon reproach me. But, neither can I give you up dear. Won't you wait Rhoda, until I see my way perhaps to better things? I exact no promise; you shall be free to choose, but—"

The old lady leaned forward, rustling in her silks.

"You hear your lover," she said sharply. "Even he at last realizes the barrier between. You can give him your promise of waiting, without being actually bound. Then, when Mr. Timmons arrives, I shall say that his presence is not needed. My will shall remain as it is, with you as sole legatee."

With burning cheeks the girl stood regarding them both—the trembling old aunt, the sorrowful lover.

"You may do as you wish with your will, Aunt Trimble," she said quietly. "And you, Harry, may renounce me if you will. I have no wish to wait for a more successful suitor—for that I suppose is what the 'waiting' amounts to." She left the room before either could reply.

The man bowed to the old woman in her chair and went sadly down the hall and out into the street. When he endeavored upon the following morning to see his sweetheart, and to make a further plea for her own interests, he was met by the discouraging announcement that Rhoda had secretly departed from her aunt's dwelling the night before, leaving only a brief message to the effect that she had gone away to "earn her living."

The aunt looked white and worn when Harry Amundson sought her out.

"Rhoda has left us completely in the dark as to her whereabouts," she said wearily, "but, she will come back."

Rhoda did not come back. Harry's own search for her was unavailing. The girl had apparently been lost among the many brave workers of whose lives she had heretofore known nothing.

Hopelessly, from time to time, the lover sought the stern old woman. An occasional communication came from Rhoda at various places. She was evidently using chance friends to mail her letters from different points. The messages told them merely that she was well and self-supporting. The last brought a slight clue, which Harry followed immediately to success.

Rhoda greeted him wan and joyous-eyed, from behind the head of a customer upon whom she had been trying various hats. But Harry did not leave his love, thereafter, until he brought her home with him as his wife.

He had telegraphed Aunt Trimble as soon as Rhoda had been found. Later he sent word of their marriage; but when the two ascended in some trepidation the steps of the stately old mansion, Mr. Timmons, the lawyer, met them at the door.

"Your Aunt Trimble went happily to sleep last night," he told them. "It is a sleep from which she will never awaken." And then Rhoda and her husband sat, still solemn in their wonder, in the old library. Mr. Timmons came to them.

"Your aunt wished me to tell you without ceremony," he said solemnly, "of the changes in her will. She wanted it understood that the will was altered the day that Harry Amundson made his renunciation. The entire estate and fortune was bequeathed to him with a compliment in the wording:

"Had I met in my youth a man like Harry Amundson, were your aunt, I should not have lived my life stultified."

CITY CONSTRUCTED IN TIERS

Three Distinct Layers of Humanity Make Up the Great Eastern Port of Hongkong.

Hongkong is built in three stories after the fashion of a Chinese pagoda. There, however, the resemblance to a temple ends. For Hongkong is a mecca of trade, a stronghold of Anglo-Saxon society and a packing box in which Chinese and other varieties of orientals are squeezed so tightly that they seem perpetually out of breath, and used to it.

This three-layer system of municipal architecture, which should be an extremely lucky arrangement according to Chinese superstition, is made possible by a hillside rising near the harbor. Up this hillside the city seems to have backed steadily until it reached the crest, where it stopped without attempting to progress down the other side.

There is no elevator from one floor of Hongkong to the next, but the cable car which shoots up and down the hill furnishes a sensation which is considered by most people very reminiscent of elevator journeys taken in American skyscrapers.

Hongkong is really three cities. The first story, being the closest to the harbor, is conveniently given over to commerce. The second floor houses the natives, a conglomeration of orientals, mainly Chinese, who all seem to be in the streets all the time.

The top floor is reserved for foreign residents. It is altogether successful as a suburb of the business port, partly because it has no competition and partly because of its obvious advantages. The name Hongkong does not suggest rose-covered cottages, but these are the accepted style of residence in upper Hongkong. When he can live on the mountain top, 1,800 feet above the crowded harbor, the foreigner does so and gladly takes the chances of having his brains added or his head knocked off in the perilous journey "to town."

THIRD BATH MOST WELCOME

Plunge in Elisha's Spring Necessary to Remove Traces of Jordan and the Dead Sea.

The Jericho region is supplied with three kinds of water, and this prodigality, coupled with the historic fame of the Jordan valley, has furnished a regular formula of bathing for pilgrims to this hot depression, nearly a quarter of a mile below the level of the sea.

Of course, every tourist has to bathe in the Dead sea; it is the thing to do. Lucky is the man whose skin does not crack in the heat of the valley, for Dead sea water on a cracked skin or the film of the eye reminds one of boiling oil and the Spanish inquisition.

Having performed the necessary rite and dutifully completed an experience which can be recorded in the diary of the trip, the poor pilgrim, laved with a tenuous fluid that seems to be composed of salt, kerosene and lye, drives off to the Jordan and seeks relief in the muddy water of that river. Then, as night rapidly settles in the deepest wrinkle on the face of Mother Earth, the tired traveler rides between the miserable hovels which constitute modern Jericho and dismounts at the Sultan's spring, once sweetened by Elisha.

Here the water is collected in a large pool, both cold and clear, and few resist the temptation to plunge into it and remove forever any lingering signs of the holy but muddy waters of the Jordan.
