THE BEACON

"Brampton!" As the conductor called out the name, two of the five passengers in the rear coach arose and made their way to the door.

The man who had sat lost in somber abstraction was the first to reach it. A drive of rain made him pause. Then he noticed that a young girl was close in his lead. He stepped to the depot platform and caught her arm.

"It is pouring a torrent," he said, "you will be soaked through if you do not gain shelter speedily."

A dismal lamp shined against a building half a hundred feet away. The girl did not resent the courtesy of a stranger and joined him in a dash down the platform. The depot was locked up and there was not a sign of life of habitation in its vicinity. The eaves were narrow and dripping.

"Wait here," spoke her companion and went to a window, raised it, climbed inside and unmet the lock of the door and lighted a lamp.

"This way, miss," he called to the girl, "Dismal inside and out. Do you know anything about this uncivilized spot?"

"Oh, yes," replied the girl animatedly. "There are no houses here for it is only a little way station, but my home is a mile distant."

"A mile in this howling tempest!" uttered the man. "It might quite as well be ten, child! Are you chilly? There is a stove here I see. I will look around and find out if there is a coal bin or woodpile handy."

He strode down the platform and examined a box with a hinged cover. It contained kindling and coal. Then he let the cover drop with a sudden crash, for from the depot there echoed a sharp ringing cry. Through the window of the lighted room he made out the figure of the girl struggling with the uncouth figure of a man in trampish attire.

Evan Rogers sent her despoiler whirling through the open doorway and the fellow made off promptly. Rogers hastened to the side of the girl, who, pale and perturbed, came close to him as if grateful for his protection. Then after two visits to the coal box he had a roaring fire in the stove. The reaction from exposure and the shock of her recent adventure had overcome the girl. Her rescuer walked over towards the window and peered out grimly.

It was a desolate prospect without, but in accord with his life, and Rogers was so engrossed in mentally surveying the circumstances that had brought him to this dreary spot that he almost forgot the girl.

He had come hither on a strange mission. Twenty years previous he had married Alice Hilde. He was young, improvident, reckless. Within two years he had trifled away her little fortune. There had been a final stormy scene. Her brother, cold, loveless, had reproached Rogers with his misdoings, had taken his sister to his own home and the next day had written a brief note to Rogers. It ran: "Alice hopes never to see your face again, but if you are a man you will go to work to repay the little fortune you have misappropriated and wasted."

Dominated by her brother, the wife never sent a further word to her husband. Rogers later heard that a little child was born. He became a changed man, accepting his dismissal as just. He was too proud to sue for forgiveness, and discerned that his wife's brother amid his hatred for him had blocked the way to any reconciliation.

At the end of each year Rogers had sent to the brother of his wife a certain sum. The last payment that marked the return to his wife of every dollar he had spent, had been made only a month since. From the attorney who acted for the brother he received a brief letter telling that he was dead and suggested that he see his wife.

Was it thus guardedly that the lawyer indicated that the death of the brother removed a barrier that had through the years prevented a reconciliation? Evan Rogers mused so long that before he turned from his absorbing thoughts the storm had cleared and the girl stood at his side.

"The roads will be bad to Aiden, where I presume you are going," she said, "but half the distance is my home. You will be very welcome to become our guest."

Rogers acquiesced in the arrangement. She was the guide now. A mile accomplished, she indicated a light in a house somewhat off from the road.

"It is mother's light in the window for me," she told Rogers cheerily. How kind you have been to me! how mother will appreciate your caring for me amid storm and peril! I shall tell her you are Mr.—?"

"Evan Rogers." The girl halted with a sharp gasp. She recoiled so that her companion caught her arm to steady her.

"And I am Evaline Rogers," she quavered, "Oh, father! is heaven's hand in all this? The lawyer told mother you might come. And she—oh, dear father! she has so longed for you, and the light of the window is for both of us. Come."

She took his hand and led him forward toward the glowing light and into paradise regained.
