DENVER MURDERER FORMERLY LIVED IN THIS CITY

Charles T. Brown, formerly employed in this city as a switchman in the Union Pacific yards, shot three times and instantly killed Edward Rodgers, another railroad man, in a room in Denver Monday afternoon. The shooting was the result of the "eternal triangle," the woman in the case being the wife of Rodgers who had been living with Brown for several months.

At the time of the shooting Brown was in bed sick with the flu, and he claims Rodgers was in the act of drawing a gun when he shot him. Mrs. Rodgers was in the room at the time the killing occurred.

While a resident of North Platte Brown had with him a woman he alleged to be his wife, but whether it was Mrs. Rodgers is not known. Brown secured railroad passes to Denver for himself and the woman, claiming that the water in this city was poisonous to her.

If the proposed water extension and sewer extension bonds carry, it is probable that the city will purchase a trench digging machine and do part or all of the work under the supervision of an experienced foreman. By doing this work employment would be given to local laboring men instead of having the laborers shipped in which would probably follow if the work is let to an outside contractor.
