NORTH PLATTE SEMI-WEEKLY TRIBUNE

ther Lucien to help him out in this

But Father Lucien forestalled him with a visit that evening. He was agreeably surprised by the warmth of and at once volunteered to assist him.

"But there will be no trouble, monsieur," he said. "Captain Dupont is independent, and he does not love the

"Father Lucien." said Hilary. "I jectionable-the liqour trade, for inhis stick upon the chipstrewn sand.

"Now that is exactly what was in my mind when I started out to see

Ste. Marie, and they are making St.

Boniface as bad as they are. They is bad; but it cannot go on. Monsieur

Askew, as I said to you the day I see you, I 'ope we shall be frien's. Now

I know we shall be, and, please God,

we shall at least keep the brandy out

They stopped and shook hands upon their compact, and then went on together, past the straggling outskirts of the village, beyond the wharf, until

The cure tapped at the door. With-volces, which suddenly ceased. Then there came the splutter of a match, and the flame of a lamp. Hilary saw a girl's figure in silhouette against the

It was that of Marle Dupont, the captain's daughter, and Hilary remembered that there was some mystery about her; he had seen her going her solitary way about the village, ignored

by all and ignoring all.

they reached Dupont's cottage.

laugh at me when I speak to them. It

"DO NOT PRESUME TO SPEAK TO ME ANY MORE!"

Synopsis .- Hilary Askew, young American, comes into possession of the Synopsis.—Hilary Askew, young American, comes into possession of the timber and other rights on a considerable section of wooded land in Quebeo-the Rospy seigniory. Lamartine, his uncle's lawyer, tells him the property is of little value. He visits it, and finds Morris, the manager, away. From Lafe Connell, mill foreman, Askew learns his uncle has been systematically robbed. Askew and Connell reach an understanding, and Askew realizes the extent of the fraud practiced on his uncle. Askew learns that Morris, while manager of his (Askew's) property, is associated with the Ste. Marle company, a rival con-cern, of which Edouard Brousseau is the owner. Hilary discharges Morris and makes Connell manager. Askew fiscovers a gang of Brousseau's men cutting timber on his property. After an altercation he is compelled to engage in a fistic battle with "Black Plerte," the leader, and whips him. He also clashes with Leblanc, his bees jobor. clashes with Leblanc, his bess jobper.

difficulty.

stance."

shade.

Ste. Marie people,

CHAPTER IV-Continued.

How far could he count on them? To the last penny, perhaps, and literally. Their jobs would hold them to him in spite of Brousseau, just so long his welcome, heard Hilary attentively, as their wages were forthcoming. Probably nine-tenths of them resented his presence in their country. His victory over Black Pierre had raised him in their estimation; they might hate him instead of despising him, but that was all. He could count on the devotion and faithfulness of perhaps one man besides Lafe Connell-little Baptiste,

The gang was hard at work below the dam, strengthening the structure of the boom. Riviere Rocheuse, pouring down from the foothills of the Laurentians, speeds with great force through the gorge above St. Boniface, widens opposite the settlement, and, gathering its waters there, shoots straight as a dart over the broken cliff into the gulf.

If, when the jam was broken, the pressure of the great mass of logs proved too strong for the boom, instead of passing into the flume they would pour over the cataract into the of St. Boniface." St. Lawrence, where their retrieval would be impossible. Such an accident had happened on a small scale once before. If it should happen now the loss would end all Hilary's hopes.

He was glad Baptiste had seen this. Hilary searched for the figure of the little timekeeper and general utility man, but failed to find it.

He ascended the hill beside the rushing cataract. He was crossing the waste land where the logs and tin cans were strewn when he saw Jean-Marie. The little man was engaged in earnest conversation with Black Pierre behind a shed. Black Pierre seemed to be protesting vigorously.

The presence of the man beside Baptiste came to Hilary with a shock. Without changing his pace he advanced toward them, in his mind repeating Lafe's advice over and over.

in his voice. "Do not come here again. Nanette." He made a swift sign over her. "God be with thee, Nanette," he said gently,

The girl fled from him, sobbing, and Hilary could hear her sobs after she had been hidden by the pines.

"Where is thy father?" asked the cure.

"He has gone to the store," faltered the girl. "Monsieur Tessier-" "I shall say nothing," answered

Father Lucien. "But do not let this happen again. Marie," he continued, "thou hast won the love of a good man."

Her face hardened, and she looked ullenly at the priest.

"A girl should think long before refusing a good man who loves her." She cast her eyes down; and there was the incarnation of rebellious stubbornness in the rigid figure.

The captain's steps were heard, crushing the wood chips into the shingie. The old man came quickly forward into the arc of lamplight; quickwas going to have a talk with you ly, as if he feared the realization of later about certain things that are obsome terror gnawing at his heart. For a moment Hilary saw the pale gray eyes with the same menace upon his Father Lucien stopped and thumped own. Then Ducont knew him.

"Bonsoir, Monsieur Askew,"he said, extending his hand.

He opened the cottage door, but the you today, Monsleur Askew," he ancure did not enter. swered. "They are bad people over at

"Captain Dupont," he said, "there has been trouble between Monsieur Askew here and Monsieur Morris." "I have heard of it," replied the captain

"Ask him if he is willing to accept his orders from me," said Hilary. The cure translated, and the captain answered him, stroking his gray beard and speaking with slow emphasis.

"It is all right," said Father Lucien finally. "Captain Dupont takes his freight where he finds it. He takes from your company in accordance with his contract. He will not break it. If Brousseau refuses him freight in Hilary could hear the murmur of he can pick up all he needs on the south shore. You can rely on him." Hilary felt deeply satisfied. If the captain was staunch, not Morris nor Brousseau nor all his men should prevent him from getting out a record cutting before navigation closed. "Tell Dupont we'll keep him busy,"

Hilary said. When he was with Father Lucien upon their homeward way he asked him a question about a matter that

"But Simeon Duval and his | Madeleine Rosny and Brousseau ahead I had no right, but I do not want brother Louis boast of Brousseau's of him, at the top of the rise. They you to go there. It is because I honor protection, and they are dangerous seemed to be talking earnestly, and you, and-" non.

that they shall not sell liquor in St. Bonlface. And by heaven I'll smash any man who tries to corrupt my peo- leine came slowly toward him. le!" he added, with a vehemence that surprised himself. Hilary slept poorly that night. Trouble seemed to be thick ing about him. Had he, indeed, the power to handle these wild people whose very tongue e could hardly understand? Then, out of the darkness, there ose, in vivid portrayal, the face of Madeleine Rosny, He admitted now how much she meant to him, enough to make any venture worth the while. He thought of their last meeting; and in spite of it he dared to dream of a happier one to come.

Before he fell asleep he had decided to go to Quebec and try to secure some jobber to take over Leblanc's look up the land records and get an accurate idea of the extent of the Rosny seigniory. Characteristically, he put his plan into practice two days later, when the your coming here to exult over our down bont arrived, instructing Lafe to hold up the dynamiting till his return. Lafe saw him off, and he had hardly arrived on board before discovering that Morris had embarked at Ste. Marie. Hilary suspected him of having learned of his plan and spying on him. The two men eyed each other, but did not speak.

Hilary put up at the Frontenac and, having business with the customs office with reference to a shipment of machinery, a small matter requiring a refund, he called there, and was disgusted to see Morris coming out of the revenue department in conversation with the assistant chief.

He failed entirely in his attempts to get a jobber to sublease Leblanc's tract. There were plenty of small men willing to do so on the installment system, but none willing to risk an immediate investment on a territory with such a reputation as St. Boniface had unjustly acquired.

Hilary knew he had to thank Morris for that. He returned to St. Boniface next day with only one thing accomplished. He had seen the land map and ascertained that the upper reaches of Rocky river had been surveyed and that the creek was wholly on his own land. He found, too, with some surprise, that a large island out in the Gulf was part of the Rosny domain. It had not appeared on Morris' rough map. Lafe, who met him at the wharf, looked worried.

"I'm glad you've come," he said, as they drove to the mill together. "Things were pretty bad on Saturday night." "They're striking?"

"No, Mr. Askew. That's the brightest point in the situation. MacPherson, the foreman, tells me that it's called off. Brousseau's dropped that maneuver, for some reason of his own." "What's the trouble, then?"

Hilary held back, unwilling to surprise She was staring at him m greater "You have my promise," said Hilary, them, Presently he saw Brousseau distress. He hardly knew whether spur his horse and gallop away in the she understood, direction of Ste. Marie, while Made-

She saw him and turned her horse aside to let him pass. She had been crying, and there were traces of tears

upon the horse's bridle. "Mademoiselle Rosny-" he began,

"Let me go on," she said in a low tone. "I want to speak to you. And if more!" you are in trouble I want to help you.' She smiled wearily, "I am not in trouble, and if I were I should hardly Her face was flaming; yet, as she nsk your aid, Monsieur Askew," she answered. Then, with sudden vehemence, "Why did you come here?" lease. At the same time he would she cried. "Why could you not have ring up hatred? Is it not enough that my father should have been compelled shame?" "I have not exulted, Mademoiselle out on this ground also,

Rosny; I am sorry."

"Take back your pity. We don't want it. What has Monsleur Brousseau done to you-or Mr. Morris?" "Morris, since you inquire, has swindled me out of several thousand dol-

'Let Me Go," She Sald in a Low Tone. lars' worth of lumber, Mademoiselle Rosny. As for Monsieur Brousseau, the trouble is of his own seeking."

"You went upon Monsleur Brousseau's land and quarreled with one of his workmen, and you ill-treated him shamefully, just because you are big and strong, and not afraid of a weaker man. And you and your hired Duval, whom Lafe indicated to Hilary, men-our men who serve you-have was a stoutish, middle-aged man in taken Monsieur Broussean's lumber. and you are going to sell it as your yourself, you outlaw !"

selly Rosny," answered Hilary quietly. "The quarrels were none of them who is quite capable of taking care of ber which is not his. I suggest, mademoiselle, that you have not tility.

wonder.

Infure you?"

shown sufficient cause for your hoscharge of a legacy which my uncle left me. It is all I have in the world.

It has been my hope to make the task successful and, in succeeding, to con-

Brousseau? Come, Mademoiselle Ros-

She did not take the hand that he

"You spoke of my good-will," she said presently, with a touch of mockery. "What is that to you? Surely is mine, can have no power to help or

"It means much to me, your good-

She leaned forward in her saddle.

'Monsieur Askew," she said, "listen to me. If you value my good-will you

"I have a natural objection to being

"It should never have been yours.

"Mademoiselle Rosny," he urged,

shall have it on one condition."

"Except that," said Hilary.

"That you leave St. Boniface."

"On any condition."

will, Mademoiselle Rosny," said Hilary.

"If Monsicur Brousseau-" she began, half-choking, "Forgive me, mademoiselle, but does he mean so much to you as that?"

She started and twitched the rein still on her cheeks. She would have away. "You are insolent i" she cried, walted for him to go by, her face "How dare you question me or lay averted, but Hilary placed his hand down the law to me? No, I have heard enough. Stay, then, Monsleur Askew, and cut down the trees that you have bought, and sell them; but do not presume to speak to me any

> She touched her horse with her spur, and the beast bounded away, almost flinging Hilnry to the ground. rode, Hilary could hear her sobbing again.

He was sure that Brousseau was the cause of her distress. He releft St. Boniface alone, instead of stir- called Lafe's words to himself on the night of their first meeting. Brousseau's grasping hand was stretched to sell your uncle our trees, without forth not only on the seignlory but on its heiress-and he vowed that the battle between them should be fought

CHAPTER VI.

Inside the Dance Hall.

It had been the general expectation that Louis Duval would open his saloon that evening. Hilary was aware that Louis and two assistants were engaged in carpentering behind the closed door of the shanty. However, evening came and the house remained closed. Furthermore, there was a general exodus toward Ste, Marie, and when the news came that Louis himself had gone it became clear that he had postponed his inauguration of the test of Hilary's authority, for reasons known best to himself, or perhaps to Brousseau.

Hilary came to the decision to ride over to Ste. Marie that night and see what was transpiring there. Lafe, to whom he confided his scheme, thought it risky, but, when he could not induce Hllary to change it, asked permission to accompany him and made him promise to avoid trouble.

It was about an hour after dark when they turned up from the beach into the main street which held the chief dance halls. Simeon Duval's place was working full blast, as were half a dozen more, and Hilary recognized numbers of his own men en route. Nobody appeared to notice them, however, and they reached Simeon's place unaccosted, and, standing upon the porch beside the door, looked in.

It was a large wooden building, within which a score of lumbermen were dancing, mostly with one another; but a few had women partners. There was no pretense of secrecy in respect of the sale of liquor. Simeon shirtsleeves, with pale blue eyes and

He was still inwardly quivering, yet trying to appear unconcerned, when the two perceived him. Pierre turned toward him with a scowl on his bruised face. His eyes were blackened, and he looked the incarnation of malignancy.

He spoke to Baptiste quickly, and to Hilary's surprise Baptiste, without acknowledging his presence, walked slowly away with him. Baptiste's sudden departure puzzled Hilary a good deal at the time, and much more afterward.

CHAPTER V. 1 132-

Maris Dupont.

Lafe was as despondent as Hilary over Leblanc's treachery. Hilary had only one cause for satisfaction in the situation, and that was a purely personal one. He was glad that Leblanc's cancellation of the contract had left the Chateau grounds immune, and so had neutralized Brousseau's first move in the campaign.

What galled him was the reflection that in this fight which Brousseau had thrust upon him he was fighting Madeleine too. He shrank from the thought of Madeleine Rosny as Brousseau's wife; he tried to think of her as sacrificing herself for her father's sake. But this picture would not hold together; she was most evidently acquainted with Brousseau's designs, and approved of them.

On the day after the interview with Leblanc a new development occurred Lafe, who had been grumbling all day, came into the office and flung down his hat in utter dejection.

"Something new?" asked Hilary.

"There's talk of a strike," said Lafe two dollars a day if you would."

"He wants to get into my capital, eh?"

"It's just one way of hitting us. I ten you, Mr. Askew, it's a tough job shobeen of his at Ste. Marie, and telling them what a hard master you are, and they're just swallowing it."

"We'll face that trouble when it de velops," answered Hilary.

But Hilary did some hard thinking, to me?" and it settled about Dupont. If Brousfinished; he could never get a lumber out some shipments before navigation anvil of life. closed. He docided to appeal to Fa-| Father Lucien released Nanette.

At the same time he figure slinking away into the shadows of the pines. Father Lucien saw it too, and darted forward and caught it by the arm, and drew it toward the beach. It was a girl of about four and gaudy finery.

very sternly, "how often have I forbidden thee to come here?"

"Let me go!" cried the girl, whimpering and struggling. The door opened and Marie Dupont stood on the threshold. The flicker-

"Nanette Bonnat," said the cure in his fears. For she has her mother's nature.

'Nanette Bonnat," Said the Cure Very Sternly, "How Often Have I Forbidden Thee to Come Here?"

ing light of the lamp within fell on in disgust. "Brousseau has had his her face, filuminating one side and men at work among 'em, and they're leaving the other half in shadow. The saying that you're keeping wages face was pretty, but sad, emblittered, down, and that Brousseau would give and rather hard. The cure, still holding Nanette by the arms, turned toward Marie.

"So my instructions count for nothing!" he said angrily,

"Well, why should she not come we've taken on. You know these men here, Monsieur Tessier?" demanded ain't got sense. Simeon Duval has Marie Dupont. "Have I so many been handing out free drinks in that friends in St. Boniface that I should Marle they are glad to see me. Is it

The ringing scorn in her voice was seau could buy out Dupont he was characteristic of some latent strength; she seemed to Hilary like one who has schooner that year, and he must get been hammered into strength upon the

had puzzled him.

"Why does Dupont look at me as if I were his mortal enemy?" he asked. "Ah, Monsieur Askew," said the cure, stopping to thump his stick upon the shingle, "there is a story there. So he looks at every man when first twenty, with a foolish, weak face and he meets him. He fears for the girl Marie-and unfortunately he is right

> "It was many years ago, nearly twenty, I think, and before I came here, when Capt. Jules Dupont was a fisherman in St. Boniface. He was married to Marie Letellier, who was much younger than he, and gay and thoughtless. People said it was an illmade match; but she loved him, and they were happy.

> "When he left his young bride to go sealing off Newfoundland the tongues wagged, but he trusted her, and when he returned there was the child Marie, and a warm welcome. So three years passed.

> "When Jules Dupont returned the fourth year his wife was gone. With whom? Nobody knew. I know more than anyone in St. Boniface, but I never knew. Some wanderer from the south shore; and six months later she was back with the child, pleading for forgiveness. He sheltered her until her death soon afterward. Since then his fear has been that Marie will have inherited the mother's nature. He never makes a voyage but he returns in fear and haste. And he wishes her to marry Jean-Marie Baptiste, who loves her-but you have seen tonight to what her mind is turning.

"The women recall her mother's fate, and their dislike has made her secretive and solitary. And it is lonely here, and Ste. Marie so near. Monsleur Askew, you saw the girl Nanette. She is from St. Joseph, of decent parents, who mourn for her. She was lured from her home to Ste. Marie, and I have fears that some one is using her as a tool to get the girl Marie Dupont into his clutches. But what can I do save watch and wait?

"Therefore, Monsleur Askew," continued Father Lucien, much agitated. "I implore you to prevent this evil from spreading to St. Boniface. It is Brousseau who debauches those poor people there. It is he who is responsible for all this evil. He cares nothing a process impossible until the snow turn from those few I have? In Ste. for the people, so long as he wields their votes for his creature in the par- out afoot to survey the timber in the so wrong that I should go there with liament at Quebec. And this, monmy friend to dance sometimes, when steur, was chiefly the cause of my er view. Hilary took the public road the doors of St. Boniface are closed visit to you tonight, to urge you to that ran along the eastern bank, without of St. Boniface, for I hear it being to an elevation opposite the low-lying said that one of the Duvals boasts he will open a dance hall there."

"No brandy shall be sold on the St. Bonlface property, Father Lucien."

"I guess Brousseau's off on another tack, Mr. Askew. All the hands was own. over to Ste, Marie on Saturday night by special invitation from Simeon Duval, who owns the biggest dance hall there. There was free drinks for everybody, and the whole place was in an of my seeking. Monsieur Brousseau, fetid air came rolling out with the touproar till Sunday morning. Not a stroke of workshas been done here till himself, lays claim to land and lumyesterday, which means a four-day week. The men are only just sobering up now.

"However, that ain't the worst, by a long sight. It's a sort of open secret that they're going to open up St. Boniface wide, and Simeon's-"

"You mean Simeon has dared to start one of his hells here while I was away?" cried Hilary angrily.

sider my neighbors and help my em-"Not yet," said Lafe. "There ain't no more liquor being sold here than ployees. Is not this a case for our usual-yet. But they're going to open working amicably together, as you suggested in the case of Monsieur up if they can. Simeon's brother Louis has rented that house by the old stany, let us forget our quarrel and be bles that Jean Baptiste used to occupy last year before it began to go to friends." pieces, and he's going to have a dance hall there and sell brandy-"

Hilary rapped out an oath. "Not if I have anything to say," he answered. "Nor me," said Lafe. "The trouble is, where do we start in? We can't fight the whole town single-handed. I my father's feeling toward you, which was wondering whether we couldn't wire the revenue people-" "No!" said Hilary sharply. "We'll fight our own battles, Lafe."

Lafe subsided in a hurt sort of way. The evidences of demoralization were obvious in St. Boniface. The men were slow and surly, the women sullen, slatternly and hopeless-looking. It was clear that they had little hope Hilary could counter this new project. Hilary was aware of a feeling in the air, as if he was being tested. He saw furtive glances as he went by, he recognized reluctance in the sullen touch while not hostile, watched him with something like resentment, as if his attitude toward the Duval proposal a mistake,' and went. Why do you vas discounted beforehand. Hilary had kept in his mind a plan stay here, to stir up trouble and agiof cutting along the bank of the river, tate us all? What is it you want, that you will not take the value of without walting for the snow. It seemyour trees from Monsieur Brousseau ed to him a feasible plan to fell right beside the water, and float the logs and go?" down, this requiring no teams to haul, driven out of my own property," said Hilary. was deep. On the Saturday he went Monsieur Brousseau wanted It, but upper reaches. In order to get a clearmy father-"

She broke off in agitation. Hilary keep the brandy and the dance halls in the Ste, Marie limits, and ascended laid his hand lightly upon the rein, sive crops. near her own.

tract on the west side.

He had nearly reached the branch conscious that he was as agitated as road which ran in toward Ste, Marie, she, "I want to ask you something. I along which Lafe and he had driven on do not want you to go to Ste. Marie, there being enormous guantities of it "I am glad, monuteur," answered the that first morning, when he perceived I said I wanted to help you. Perhaps available, a thin crop of reddish hair, turning You ought to be ashamed of gray. He wore spectacles, which gave him a strange, scholastic expression,

"You're altogether wrong, Mademol- and the arms beneath his upturned sleeves were a mass of fat and muscle. The interior was vilely hot, gusts of bacco smoke, and the din was deafening.

As the two stood there Hilary was astonished to see little Baptiste push past them and enter. His face was agitated, and he seemed to see noth-"I have done you no wrong," urged ing but his objective. He strode Hilary. "I have come here to take through the dancers toward one side of the room, where two girls were seated. Hilary had observed one of them decline several invitations to dance and drink, though apparently urged by the other; now he recognized them as Nanette and Marle Dupont. Baptiste strode straight up to Marie and stood before her. Hilary could hear nothing, but he saw the little timekeeper gesticulating, and apparently imploring her. He saw Marie shrug her shoulders and avert her extended, but she looked at him in face. Nanette was laughing, and two or three of the lumbermen nearby watched the little scene with amusement. Baptiste grew more vehement. Marie turned on him angrily.

A dance hall-and the beginning of more trousome 100 feet long and 250 feet wide, found in Denmark, England, Scotland, France and in parts of Europe, North 1y. "Belleve me, I am not thinking of and South America and Australia. They are supposed to be the refuse of the cap and the unsmilling faces, paid, and the rights are yours. But heaps of prehistoric periods, and are composed chiefly of oyster, periwinkle, could esteem you and-and give you cockle and mussel shells. In them are found implements of wood, stone, bones of animals and cinders.

Sea-Island Cotton.

Practically all of the sea-island cotton is produced in the states of Georgia, Florida and South Carolina, the finest coming from the chain of islands off the Carolina coast. It is well named sea-island cotton, as when grown away from the coast the fiber rapidly degenerates into upland cotton unless seed grown in the islands is obtained for planting success

Alcohol From Moss.

A Swedish syndicate is planning to distill alcohol spirit from white moss,

"Kitchen Middens." "It is not that I grudge you your possession," resumed the girl hurriedthat. As you said, the money was this is no place for you, monsieur. I my good-will if you said 'I have made

