A FAR CRY

By GEORGE E. COBB

(Copyright, 1920, Western Newspaper Union)

"Professor Dumfries says Waldron has a natural genius for mimicry and music."

Robert Fletcher did not reply to the remark of his wife, and she looked disappointed.

"Don't you believe in encouraging talent?" she urged, and there was a trifle of petulance in her tones.

"I do," answered Robert, "but to be plain with you, Marian, from closely studying Waldron and having his real welfare at heart, I do not believe that a penchant for ragtime and slang and an ambition to be a popular clog dancer will help Waldron in a business way. There is a fine academy at Leesville, Waldron needs discipline and training. Why not fit him for the serious duties of life instead of for its follies?"

"You are a kill joy, Robert! Time enough for Waldron to take on the cares of life when he has had a share of its enjoyments," and Marian Fletcher flaunted from the room.

It was not the first misunderstanding of husband and wife, if it could be termed such. Robert Waldron held his temper steadily, as he always did. Waldron was ever the bone of contention between them.

Marian De Lorme was a widow when Robert Fletcher had married her, and he married her for love. Her son was made welcome to his home by Robert until patience ceased to be a virtue.

The boy refused to attend school regularly, he trained with an idle and vicious group and he was insolent and disobedient. Robert tried to gently lead the fond mother into a co-operation with himself to remove Waldron from bad influences, but Mrs. Fletcher jealously stood up for the young scapegrace, even to the point of pointing and sullessness.

At the end of two years of indifferent wedded experience there came about the parting of the ways. Waldron grew from bad to worse. Twice his stepfather had detected him in thefts, and several times the unruly member of the household had run away from home, once with a circus, again with a troupe of traveling minstrels.

"But he has such brilliant instincts!" boasted the mother, who had spoiled him. "He sings like a lark and is agile and clever as a born athlete."

Finally Robert laid down the law. He mapped out a reasonable, sensible program of school and home discipline. The mother sulked and differed with him. The stepson resented all strict censorship. One day both left home, and a brief note informed Robert that they would hereafter take care of themselves.

He traced them to the city, but all efforts at a reconciliation were repulsed. It hurt him sorely to hear that his wife had lost all regard for him. He kept the home open for several months, had an attorney interview the truant wife, was told bluntly by the lawyer that she was a perverse, misguided woman, and then Robert sold his home, loyally sent half the proceeds to his wife and went to the far West to lead a broken life.

His last instructions to his lawyer were to the effect that he was ready to renew his relations with his wife and son at any time.

Robert settled in a growing town in Oregon and succeeded in a business which he conducted only half heartedly. At the end of two years the lawyer wrote to him that Waldron had gone on the vaudeville stage and had met with a fair reception. Later the intelligence came that the boy had become a reckless gambler, had involved his mother in a financial way, had stolen her diamonds, and deserted her and had disappeared. No traces of either mother or son were reported for a year after that. Then the lawyer wrote he had heard that Waldron was in a hospital in New Orleans, broken in health. As to the mother, he stated that he had received a letter from her dated from a small New England town asking for the address of her husband.

"Never mind the boy," came the prompt reply from Robert. "I know where he is. By all means keep in as close touch as possible with his mother."

One evening Robert Fletcher was seated in the elegant home his industry had acquired when there was a call on the phone. "Long distance," was the notification from the central telephone office, and a city over a thousand miles distant was named. He took up the receiver:

"It is Marian," came the tremulous words that thrilled. "May I come home?"

A far cry! How his soul thrilled! A quivering, longing reply: "My dear, you will be oh! so welcome."

He was in the private office two days later when a veiled woman was shown in. She advanced timidly, to fall upon her knees, her pleading hands uplifted.

"Not there!" cried Robert, lifting her up, "but here, next to my loving heart!"

"It was Waldron who parted us, and he was so unworthy," she sobbed.

"But redeemed," strangely spoke her husband. "We have all learned our lesson, dear. Look."

He opened the door slightly, and she peered past him to view at a desk, diligent with the light of an earnest purpose on his face, the new Waldron.

PEARL MOSQUE WELL NAMED

Structure at Agra, India, Admittedly One of the Most Beautiful in the World.

Among the most beautiful of Shah Jahan's sculptured monuments is the Pearl mosque at Agra. The entrance gateway of red sandstone contrasts effectively with the interior of white and blue-veined marble. An inscription in letters of black marble states that this mosque may be likened to a precious pearl, for no other mosque is similarly lined with marble.

The Indian influence upon Mahometan architecture of this period is evidenced in the lotus petal cap decorating the domes and in the purely Hindu finials, legitimate Mahometan mosques bearing instead the simple spire, with the star and crescent. The foliated arches come from a Buddhist source, symbolizing the lotus-leaf shaped aura around the body of Gautama. The pointed upper foliage is derived from the shape of the leaf of the bodhi, or pipal tree, under which Gautama attained to enlightenment and Buddha-hood, and is commonly used in Buddhist idolatry to indicate the nimbus around the head.

The master builders of Mogul days were chiefly Indians from Bengal, and since they were artists and artisans rather than mechanical workers much of the inspiration of the architecture of this period must be accredited to them.

GREAT WORK OF TEACHERS

Theodore Roosevelt's Tribute to Their Services to the Country Surely Well Deserved.

Moreover, as an incident to your teachers' avowed work, you render some well-nigh unbelievable services to the country. For instance, you render to this republic the prime, the vital service of amalgamating into one homogeneous body the children of those who are born here and of those who come here from so many different lands abroad. You furnish a common training and common ideals for the children of all the mixed peoples who are here being fused into one nationality. It is in no small degree due to you and to your efforts that we, of this great American republic, form one people instead of a group of jarring peoples. The children, wherever they have been born, wherever their parents have been born, who are educated in our schools side by side with one another, will inevitably grow up having that sense of mutual sympathy and mutual respect and understanding, which is absolutely indispensable for working out the problems that we as citizens have before us.—Theodore Roosevelt, in an address before the National Educational association at Ocean Grove, July 7, 1905.

The Wigs of Constantinople.

There was a special assistant to the French ambassador in Constantinople years ago whose friends in Paris wished to play a trick on him, and so they told him to take a cargo of wigs with him to Constantinople, and he would make a lot of money. The man bought the cargo of wigs, only to find on arrival that the people had never heard of wigs and had no use for them whatever. The ambassador noticing that his friend was melancholy, discovered the cause to be the unsold cargo of wigs, so he told the story to the grand vizier, who told the sultan. Whereupon the sultan sent an order to all the synagogues in the city that all the Jews in the city must wear wigs. The Jews didn't even know what a wig was, much less where they could get one. And this was just the moment for the possessor of a cargo of wigs, who put them on the market and made a pocketful of money.

Helgoland Beliefs.

Helgoland was called Hertha in ancient times. The island was independent from the tenth to the fourteenth centuries, until the dukes of Schleswig took it over and used it mainly as a pawn for loans until the Danes acquired it 400 years later. Denmark ceded it to Great Britain in the nineteenth century and the British fortified it for defensive purposes.

The islanders absorbed customs and ideas of the many nationalities that visited them, adorning each with a distinctive touch. They even had a curious quirk in their Satan, a wooden leg Hence the Schleswig saying: "In Helgoland the devil goes on crutches."

Buffalo Roam in Australia.

When Australians refer to their empty north, they do not always recall the fine herds of buffalo which roam in the northern territory. The buffalo has prospered greatly since the first animals were imported, and his hide and horns offer a fairly easy source of revenue. In the hot, wide territory over which the "mud buffalo" roams, it is not feasible to use him as a new source of food supply, and attempts at yarding have shown that the buffalo is a true Australian, as he resents being driven and expresses this resentment vigorously. It is stated that the mud buffalo has four stomachs and does not chew the cud.

Kill Him.

"Where are you going?" asked the returned hero's mother as he strode toward the door, a vicious look on his face.

"To find the man who sent me this letter suggesting that I take a course in physical culture," was the savage response as the door slammed.—Home Sector.
