EVENTS IN NORTH PLATTE
THIRTY-FIVE YEARS AGO

(From The Tribune March 14, 1885.)
The City council passed an ordinance levying a tax of ten dollars on land agents and placing them under $3,000 bond. "Land agents" were men who located land seekers on homesteads.

Mrs. Catherine Ottman died at the home of her son-in-law Geo. W. Dillard at the age of fifty-eight years. Owners of cows—nearly every family owned a cow—were notified by the marshal that they must keep the animals off the streets and especially away from the business section.

The first horseback party of the season was to be held Saturday evening. Bill McDonald, Lon Graves and a half dozen other young men and an equal number of young ladies had formed a riding club.

A corps of Burlington surveyors had appeared in the south part of the county running lines for what is now the "high line" railroad.

C. F. Ormsby announced himself a candidate for mayor. Lester Ellis for city treasurer and C. C. Hawkins for city clerk.

The saloons conducted by Bill Tucker and Oyster & Smith were broken into and considerable money taken. Tucker bemoaned the loss of a half bushel of poker chips which the thief toted away.

The celebrated American drama "Across the Continent" was booked at the Keith opera house.

Sheriff Bangs took two boys to the reform school at Kearney. At that time there were sixty-seven boys at that institution.

Lots in the new town of Burnham City, in the west part of the county were placed on sale.

A. O. Kocken, merchant tailor, called attention to his large line of spring and summer suitings.

W. L. McGee and family had returned from a visit at the New Orleans exposition. T. J. Foley was home from New York City where he purchased goods for his store and Dr. Clark had returned from Washington, D. C., where he attended the inauguration of President Cleveland.

E. V. Piler, president of the Plum Creek (now Lexington) ball team, was in town arranging for a series of games.

The Kinkaid District.
Under the above caption a Washington man writes as follows concerning our congressman from the "Big Sixth": "A few years ago there was a region in northwest Nebraska that people said was 'no good.' Then Moses P. Kinkaid came to Congress, and offered the solution for the problem in his district. 'Dry farming is a success,' he declared, 'but it takes a lot of land for each family to succeed. He proposed enlarged homesteads, and the Judge got double the amount of acres for his farmers. Time has proven that the Nebraska Congressman was right. His poor farmers have developed their enlarged homesteads, and are enjoying the average degree of prosperity. Now Judge Kinkaid's plan for a million trees for his Nebraskans has been adopted by the government, and they will be distributed to over five thousand people by the Forest Service.

"Thus a Congressman reclaimed the desert and now he is having it sprinkled over with trees. Men like Judge Moses P. Kinkaid do the impossible, and we may also expect he will find a way to plant pools of water on every farm around the borders of which his trees will furnish shade for fishermen who will some day gather in the finny tribe that Uncle Sam will be induced to provide for these imaginary lake-fishes.

"These last expectancies are, of course exaggerations. But they seem little less possible than did the schemes of that quiet Nebraska Congressman when he broached them to the lawmakers years ago. Would that there were more Kinkaid-men who would invent practical ways and means through which government action might be directed in making other sections of the country happy and prosperous, by simply pointing out and insisting on the logical, commonsense way of doing things."

Hitchcock For President.
United States Senator G. M. Hitchcock is now a formal candidate for president of the United States. J. W. Millin of Omaha, chairman of the state Hitchcock organization, filed with the secretary of state just before noon Saturday a batch of petitions containing much more than the hundred names from each of the six congressional districts.

The only entry ahead of him in the democratic primary was that of Ross of Lexington, the eccentric who runs every four years on both tickets. If the senator gets the highest preference vote in the primary the democratic delegates from Nebraska will be under obligations to vote for him in the national convention until their consciences are satisfied. Maybe they will vote longer, because of the criticism heaped upon W. J. Bryan in the 1912 convention for leaving Clark after thirteen ballots, because Champ accepted support from Wall street delegates. Mr. Bryan is now a candidate for delegate at the democratic primaries, but says that if elected he will never vote for Hitchcock, letting his alternate do the voting for president.

Nominating Congressional Candidate.
Nonpartisan league delegates from the Sixth congressional district of Nebraska, meeting in Grand Island Saturday, nominated James Elliott, of Scotts Bluff for Congressman from that district. Owing to Mr. Elliott's ill health it is uncertain if he will run, as he resigned from the state executive committee recently because of poor health and also declined to permit the use of his name as a candidate for governor on the league ticket.

PRICE OF SUGAR BEETS ON SUGAR PRICE BASIS.

The American Beet Sugar company announces that since formulating its contract in January it has received numerous inquiries from various beet growers' associations regarding a contract price for beets based upon the selling price of sugar. The announcement continues: "We are anxious at all times to do everything possible consistent with good business judgment to meet the views of our growers and in response to these inquiries we have decided to offer a bonus on all 1920-21 operations in Grand Island based upon the following: If the total production of sugar at the Grand Island factory for the season of 1920-21 reaches or exceeds 110,000 bags and if the average net seaboard or basing price of beet sugar during the months of November and December, 1920, and January, 1921, exceeds $11 per 100 pounds, the company will on February 15, 1921, make an additional payment on all beet deliveries for the 1920 season of an amount equivalent to $1 per ton of beets for each $1 received per 100 pounds of sugar in excess of the $11 basis, fractions in proportion."

GERMAN SOCIALIST GOVERNMENT
OVERTHROWN BY MILITARISTS.

The government of Frederick Ebert, the socialist president of the German republic, was overthrown Saturday by a military coup d'etat. Dr. Wolfgang Kapp, one of the founders of the fatherland, and general director of the agricultural societies, has ousted Gustav Bauer, the chancellor, and in taking that office himself, has temporarily assumed supreme direction of affairs.

There are now two contending governments in Germany, the new one, under Chancellor Kapp, at Berlin; the old one, under President Ebert, at Dresden. Officials of the new government declare that it is not reactionary or monarchist. The president of the old government and his ministers have issued a proclamation calling upon the people to rise in a general strike as the only means of preventing the return of Wilhelm II.

Berlin is occupied by troops of the counter-revolution—to what number is not known—and the movement is spreading rapidly through the provinces. Masses of troops and naval brigades with artillery have been brought into the capital and dominate the situation.

BROWN BUTTONS
By MILDRED WHITE.
(Copyright, 1920, Western Newspaper Union)

Rhoda sat listening as Mrs. Hamilton talked, and rebellion arose within her. Was it for this, the visit had been urged upon her? That she might be led into a marriage with the exciting son of her mother's dearest friend, John Hamilton's virtues had been sung into Rhoda's ears as long as she could remember: John Hamilton, the spoiled and adored of his mother, Rhoda, in her country home had anticipated long this stay in the city. She had thought then only of the companionship of her mother's girlhood friend, and of the joyful glimpses into a big world, which she might give her. Then, "Aunt Cynthia," as the girl had been taught to call her hostess—spoiled it all.

"I am going to be perfectly frank, Rhoda," she said. "To have my friend's daughter for my own daughter-in-law, is the secret wish of my heart.

Cynthia Hamilton regarded her guest perplexedly.

"It cannot be possible," Mrs. Hamilton was asking, "that you are already promised to another, Rhoda? But," she quickly added, "your mother would have told me of your engagement."

"Not exactly engaged, Aunt Cynthia," she calmly replied, "but there is a man whom I intend to marry—the man who has my heart." Which will be true, Rhoda told her conscience, when the time comes.

"Your mother made no reference to a possible admirer," Aunt Cynthia said sharply.

"I don't think," Rhoda replied, "that mother knows him."

"Not," Aunt Cynthia reproached—"a clandestine affair!" Rhoda shook her head.

"He doesn't live in our town," she explained confusedly. Mrs. Hamilton sighed in relief and smiled.

"We all have those fancies, my dear," she said indulgently. "When I see this lover I will consider you seriously. For the present let us drop the subject. I have an errand for you to do. Would you mind going down town? You can ride directly to the store door. I have some buttons to be matched, brown buttons, for my new suit. The tailor must have them tonight.

Rhoda seized upon this escape, but when she stood in the aisle of the great department store a sample button in the palm of her gloved hand, Rhoda's cheeks were still flushed from her encounter, and two dimples popped out in her cheeks.

"Rhoda Blair," she said mentally, "that was an awful position to put yourself into. Engaged—almost—and not a man on your horizon."

Just then Rhoda, dimples and all, bumped into a man who sent the brown button rolling down the floor. The young man dimly pursuing the button brought it back with a bow to its owner. And Rhoda perceiving him to be hatless, took the nice young man to be a floor usher and asked to be directed to the "button department." With a stare and a quick, pleasing smile, the young man offered to escort her there and with a protecting arm against the shopping throng led the way to an elevator. As a store usher, however, he was strangely remiss, for as the two issued through a labyrinth of ways, no button department was in evidence. It was necessary for the obliging young man again to seek the elevator and a search of the floors below. His gaze, as he did so, was admiring, though politely bent upon Rhoda's pretty face. And when at last the button department was found the particularly desired button, was not among its number; the nice young man promptly offered to have it hunted out in stock, and delivered surely, that evening. It was with evident regret that he bowed his fair customer through the doorway, while Rhoda riding back to Aunt Cynthia's, experienced a pleasing sense of coming adventure. The adventure arrived that evening. An exceedingly nice looking young man, ushered by the maid into the presence of John Hamilton and his mother, asked, flushing boyishly, to see "Miss Blair." While Rhoda, entering at that moment, was in time for Mrs. Hamilton's reproachful remark. "You did not tell me," she said, "that the friend of whom you spoke lived in our city."

Impulsively, though perplexedly, the "friend" himself, saved Rhoda reply.

"I am Jack Warren of Warren & Son's department store," he said, "permit me to introduce myself."

John Hamilton arising, bowed testily and left the room, while his mother with an astonished murmured response quickly followed.

"I came," the nice man told Rhoda, "to bring those buttons: My own delivery. Thought, when your folks knew who I was, that they'd let me stay awhile—with you. But my presence seems unwelcome, so—"

"Not your presence," Rhoda hastened to explain. She gazed. "I guess I had better tell you all about it," she said despondently, and she did.

Jack Warren listened, his pleasing smile broke forth.

"I'd love to play up in that 'almighty' finance of yours while you are here," he said.

Then eagerly his eyes held the girl's.

"Afterward," he added daintily, "I am going to do my best to try to quit the 'almighty'."
