SCRAPPLE
A Column of Nonsense.

The other day when we were going over to Durbin's Garage to buy an Oldsmobile, a man stopped us and asked us why people all over town dug such ditches between the lawn and the sidewalk. We could not tell him so we thought we would go over and ask Ed Davis, so we did. Ed wanted to know if we were complaining about those ditches and we said yes we were for our bicycle went into one of them the other day when we were trying to get out of the way of a dog and we took a tumble which hurt our dignity as well as stove in our frame. Ed asked us if they were irrigation ditches and we said that could not be for people would prefer to water the sidewalk with the the sprinkler and Ed said maybe they were drainage ditches. We told him that people usually built their sidewalks lower than the lawn so the water would run off the lawn onto the sidewalk and so not hurt the lawn. Then we said that maybe it was to keep people from walking on the lawns and Ed asked if we thought the ditch would catch people by their high heels and we said that might be but that we would think they would use a fence to keep people off the lawns and Ed asked if the ditch was to run one wheel of the lawnmower in so he would not scar up the sidewalk and we said that if it was a good thing to run one wheel in it would be a good thing to make another to run the other wheel in and Ed said that was reasonable. When Ed asked if we had some of those ditches at our house and we said we had dug some in the spring and he asked why we had done it and we said it was because Art Salisbury and Jim Fonda had done it and Ed said "Well, well, that's strange" and we said it wasn't any stranger for us to have them than for him to have them, and he said he would knock off our block if we insinuated anything and so we came away. And now we know.
